THE MUSEUM EDITION

ANACREON

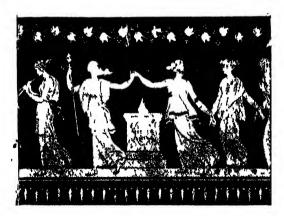

THE ODES OF ANACREON

TRANSLATED BY

THOMAS MOORE

W "% ALL THE ORIGINAL NOTES AND DESIGNS BY GIRODE'I'

JEUNDON: GIBBINGS & COMPANY

AUTHOR'S PREFACE 1

The idea of attempting a version of some of the Songs of Odes of Aniercon had very carly occurred to me, and a specimen of my first ventures in this undataking may be found in the Dublin Magazine, where, in the number of that work for behavior's bifth appeared a "Paraphrase of Aniercon's bifth"

¹ Extracted from the lightant of the Collected Edition of the Poetical Works London, 1841

Ode, by T. Moore." As it any not be uninteresting to future and better anslators of the poet to compare this schoolboy experiment with any later and more laboured version of the same ode, I shall here extract the specimen found in the Anthologia—

- "Let us, with the clustering vine,
 The rose, Love's blushing flower, entwine,
 Fancy's hand our chaplets wreathing,
 Vernal sweets around us breathing,
 We'll gaily drink, full goblets quaffing,
 At frighted Care securely laughing.
- "Rose! thou balmy-scented flower,
 Rear'd by Spring's most fostering power,
 Thy dewy blossoms, opening bright,
 To gods themselves can five delight;
 And Cypria's child, with coses crown'd,
 Trips with each Grace the mazy round
- "Bindeny brows, I't tune the lyre,
 I ove my taptulous strains shall fire.
 Near Bacchus' an ape-encircled shrine,
 While loses fresh my brows entwine.
 Led by the winged train of Pleasures," I'll dance with pymphs to sportive measures."

In pursuing further this light task, the only object I had for some time in view was to lay before the Brard of Trinity College a select humber of the odes I had then translated, with a hope—suggested by the kind encouragement I had already received -that they might consider them as deserving of some honour or reward. Having experienced much hospitable attention from Doctor Kearney, one of the senior fellows,1 a man of most amiable character, as well as of refified scholarship, I submitted to his perusal the manuscript of my translation as far as it had then proceeded, and requested his advice_respecting my intention of laying it before the Board. On this latter point his opinion was such as, with a little more thought, I might hive anticipated, namely, that he did not see how the Board of the University could lend their sanction, by any public reward, to writings of so convivial and amatory a nature as were almost all of. Anacreon. He very goodnaturedly, however, lauded my translation, and advised me to complete and publish it.

Appointed Provost of the University in the year 1799, and made afterwards Bishop of Ossony.

I was also indebted to him for the use. during my task, of Spaletti's curious publication, giving a facsimule of those pages of a MS. in the Vatican Itibrary which contain the Odes, or "Symposiacs," attributed to Anacieon.1 And here I shall venture to add a few passing words on a point which I once should have thought it profanation to question, - the authenticity of The cry raised against their poems. 1 When the monument to Provost Baldwin, which stands in the hall of the College of Dublin, airived from Italy, there came in the samepacking case with it two copies of this work of Spaletti, one of which was presented by Di. Troy, the Roman Cathol aichbishop, as a gift from the Pope to the Library of the University, and the other (of which I was subsequently favoured with the use) he presented, in like manner, to my friend Di Kearney, curiously enough, while Anacreon in English was considered - air, I grant, on no unreasonable grounds as a work to which grave collegiate authorities could not openly lend their sanction, Anacteon in Gi , I was thought no unfitting present to be received by a Protestant bishop, through the medium of a Catholic archbishop, from the hands of his holiness the Pope genumeness by Roberte us and other enemies of Henry Stephen, when that emment scholar first maroduced them to the learned world, may be thought to have long since entirely subsided, leaving their claim to so ancient sa paternity safe and unquestioned. But I am forced to confess, however reluctantly, that there appear to me strong grounds for pronouncing these light and beautiful lyrics to be merely modern fabrications. Some of the icasons that incline me to adopt this unwelcome conclusion are thus clearly stated by the same able scholar, to whom I am indebted for the emendation, of my own juvenile Greek ode: "I do not see how it is possible, if Anacicon hid written chiefly in lambic dimeter wirse, that Horace should have wholly neglected that metre. I may add that, of them fragments of Anaciena, of whose genuincness, from internal evidence, there can be doubt, almost all are written in one or other' of the lighter Horatian metres, and scarcely one in tambic dimeter verse. This may be seen by looking through the list in Fischer."

The unskilful amempt at Greek verse from my own pen, which is found prefixed to the Translation, was intended originally to illustrate a picture, representing Anacreon conversing with the Goddess of Wisdom, from which the frontispiece to the first edition of the work was taken. Had I been brought up with a due fear of the laws of prosody before my eyes, I certainly should not have dared to submit so untutored a production to the criticism of the trained prosodians of the English schools. At the same time, I cannot help adding that, as far as music, distinct from metre, is concerned, I am much inclined to prefer the ode as originally written to its present corrected shape; and that, at all events, I entertain but very little douber as to which of the two a composer would most willingly set to music.

For the means of collecting the materials of the notes appended to the Translation I was chiefly indebted to an old library adjoining St. Patrick's Cathedral, called from the name of the archbishop who founded 't, Marsh's a Library. Through my acquaintance with the deputy librarian, the Rev. Mr. Cradock, MI enjoyed the privilege of constant access to this collection, even at that period of the year when it is always closed to the public. On these occasions I used to be locked in there alone; and to the many solitary hours which, both at the sime I am now speaking of and subsequently, I passed in hunting through the dusty tomes of this old library, I owe much of that odd and out-of-the-way sort of reading which may be found scattered through some of my earlier writings.

Larly in the year 1799, while yet in my nineteenth year, I left Ireland, for the first time, and proceeded to Lordon, with the two not very congenial objects, of keeping my terms at the Middle Temple, and publishing, by subscription, my Translation of Anacron. One of those persons to whom, through the active zeal of friends, some part of my manuscript, had been submitted before it went to press, was Doctor Laurence, the able friend of Burke; and, as an instance, however slight, of that ready variety of learning, as well the lightest as the most solid, for which Laurence was so remarkable, the following extract from the letter written by him, in returning the manuscript to my friend Dr. Husne, may not be without some interest:—

" Dec. 20. 799.

"I return you the four odes which you were so kind to communicate for my poor opinion. They are, in many parts, very elegant and poetical; and, in some passages, Mr. Moore has added a pretty turn not to be found in the original. To confess the truth, however, they are, in not a few places, rather more paraphrastical than suits my notion (perhaps an incorrect notion) of translation.

"In the fifty-third ode there is, in my judgment, a no less sound than beautiful emendation suggested--would you suppose it?—by a Dutch lawyer. Mr. M. possibly may not be aware of it. I have endeavoured to express the sense of it in a couplet interlined with pencil. Will you allow me to idd, that I am not certain whether the translation has not missed the meaning too, in the former part of that passage which cems to me to intend a distinction and climax of pleasure. It is sweet even to prove it imping the birry paths, it is sweet again, placking, to cherish with tender hands, and carry to the fur, the flower of love? This is nearly literal, including the conjectural correction of Mynheer Medenach. If this be right, instead of

Is sweet to dare the tangled fence

I would propos something to this effect—

Its sweet the 11 h perfume to prove

A by the dewy bush you rove,

Its sweet to date the tingled fence,

I o cull the timed beauty thence

I o wipe with tender hands away

The tears that on its bluffers lay 1

^{&#}x27; Query if it ought not to be lie! The line might run -

With tender hand the tears to brush, I hat give new softmest to it blush (oi, its flush).

Then, to the bosom of the fair, The flower of love in triumph bear '

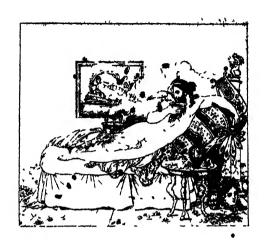

"I would drop altogether the image of the stems, dropping rould rems." I believe it is a confused and false metaphor, unless the painter should take the figure of Autora from Mrs. Hastings.

"There is another amendation of the same critic, in the following line, which Mi. M. may seem, by accident, to have, sufficiently expressed in the phrase of 'roses shed their light.'

"I scribble this in very great haste, but fear that you and Mr. Moore will find me too long, minute, and respectment. Believe me to be, very sincerely,"

"Your obedient, humble servant,

"F. LAURENCE."

REMARKS ON ANACREON

THERE is but little known with certainty of the life of Anacreon. Chamæleon Heracle-otes, who wrote upon the subject, has been lost in the general wreck of ancient literature. The editors of the poet have collected the few trifling anecdotes which are scattered through the extant authors of antiquity, and, supplying the deficiency of materials by fictions of their own imagination, have arranged, what they call, a life of Anacreon. These specious fabrications are intended to indulge that integest which we naturally feel in the biography of illustrious men; but it is rather a dangerous kind of illusion, as it confounds the limits of history and romance, 1 ind is too often supported by unfaithful citation.

He is quoted by Athenaus • TW WERL TOU APLKEPSOUTOR.

Our poet was boin in the city of Teos,

1 The History of Anaercon, by Gaçon ("Le Poete sans fard, as he styles himself), is priofessedly a romance, nor does Mademoiselle Scuderi, from whom he borrowed the idea, pretend to historical veracity in her account of Anaercon and Sappho". These, then, are allowable But how can Baines be forgiven, who, with all the confidence of a biographer, traces every wandering of the poet, and settles him at last, in his old age, at a country villa near Teos."

The learned Bayle has detected some infidelities of quotation in Le Fevre (Dictionnaire Historique, etc.) Madame Daciei is not more accurate than her father they have almost made Anacreon prime minister to the monarch of Samos

3 The Asiatics were as remarkable for genius as for luxury "Ingenia Asiatica inclyta per gentes fecêre Poetz, Anacreon, inde Mimneimus et ' Antimachus, etc" (Sonnus)

in the delictous region of Ionia, and the time of his birth appears to have been in the sixth century before Christ. He flourished at that remarkable period, when, under the polished tyrints Hippirchus and Polycrates, Athens and Samos were become the rival asylums of genius. There is nothing certain known about his family, and those who pretend to discover in Plato that he was a descendant of the monarch Codius, show much more of zeal than of either accuracy or judgment.

The disposition and tilents of Anacicon recommended him to the monarch of Samos, and he was formed to be the filend of such a

I have not attempted to define the particular Olympiad but have adopted the idea of Bayle, who says, "It is an point marque d'Olympiade car pour un homme qui a vieu 85 ans il me semble que l'on ne doit polit s'enfermei dans des bornes si étroites"

This mistake is founded on a false interpretation of a very obvious passage in Plato's Dialogue on Temperance, it originated with Madame-Dacker, and has been received implicitly by many. Gail, a late editor of Anacreon, seems to claim to himself the merit of detacting this error, but Bayle had observed it before him prince as Polycgates. Susceptible only to the pleasures, he felt not the corruptions of the court; and, while Rythagoras fled from the tyrans, Anacroon was relebrating his praises on the lyre. We are told too by Maximus Tyrius, that, by the influence of his amatory songs, he softened the mind of Polycrates into a spirit of benevolence towards his subjects.

The amours of the poet, and the rivalship of the tyrant, I shall pass over in elence; and there are few, I presume, who will regret the omission of most of those anecdotes which the industry of some editors has not only promulged, but discussed. Whatever is repugnant to modes and virtue is considered in ethical science, by a supposition

¹ Ανακρεων Σαμιοις Πολυκρατην ἡμερωυ ε (Maxim, Tyr, § 21). Maximus Tyrius mentions this among other instances of the influence of poetry. If Gail had read Maximus Tyrius, how could be iidicule this idea in Moutonnet, as unauthenticated?

In the romance of Ofelia, the anecdote to which I allude is told of a young girl, with whom Anacreon fell in love while she personated the god Apollo iff a mask. But here Mademoiselle Scuderi consulted nature more than truth.

very favourable to humanity, as impossible; and this amiable persuasion should be much more strongly entertained, where the transgression wars with nature as well as virtue. But why are we not allowed to indulge in the presumption? Why are we officiously reminded that there have been really such instances of depravicy?

Hipparchus, who now maintained at Athens the power which his father Pisistratus had usurped, was one of those princes who may be said to have polished the fetters of their subjects. He was the first, according to Plato, who edited the poems of Homer, and commanded them to be sung by the rhapsodists at the celebration of the Panathenæa. From his court, which was a sort of galaxy of genius, Anacreon could not long be absent. Hipparchus sent a barge for him; the poet readily embraced the invitation, and the Muses and the Loves were wafted with him to Athens.¹

¹ There is a very interesting a French poem founded upon this anecdote, imputed to Desyvetaux, and called Angesen Guoyen.

Remarks on Anacrega

The manner of Agacreen's death was singular. We are told that in the eighty-fifth year of his age he was choked by a grape-stone; if and, however we may smile at their enthusiastic partiality, who see in this easy and characteristic death a peculiar indulgence of Heaven, we cannot help admiring that his fate should have been so emblematic of his disposition. Cashus Calcagninus alludes to this citistiophe in the following epitaph on our pact—

1 Fabricius appears not to trust very implicitly in this story. Uvæ pisak acino tandem suffocatus, si credimus buidæ in ouvororys alii enim hoc mortis genere periisse tridunt Sophoelem" (Tibri in Billiothic Cria lib ii cap 15). It must be confessed that I seian who tells us that bophoeles was choked by a grape stone, in the very same treatise mentions the longevity of Anacreon, and yet is silent on the manner of his death. Could be have been ignorantiof such a iomaik ible coincidence, oi, knowing, could be have neglected to remark it? See Regnier's Introduction to his Anacreon.

2 At to, sancto senox, acrous sub l'artara misit, Cygnez clausit qu' tibi vocis iter.

Those lips, then, hallowed sage, which pour'd along A music sweet as any eygner's song,

A music sweet as any eygiet's song,

The grape hath closed for ever!

Here let the twy kiss the not's stomb,

Here let the rose he lov'd with laurels bloom,

In bands that ne'er shall sever.

But far be thou, oh't far, unholy vine.

By whom the lavourite ministrel of the Nine

Lost his sweet visil breath;

Thy God himself now blushes to confess,

Once hallow'd vine! he feels he loves thee less,

Since poor Anacreon's death.

It has been supposed by some writers that Anacreon and Sappho were contemporaries; and the very thought of an intercourse between persons so congenial, both in warmth of passion and delicacy of genus, gives such

Vos, heder z., tumulum, tumulum vos cingite, lauri,

Hoc tosa perpetuo vernet odora loco;
At vitis procul hinc, procul hinc odiosa facessat,
Quæ causam diræ protulit, uva, necis,
Creditur ipse minus vitem jam Bacchus amare,
In vatem tantum quæ fuit ausa nefas.

The author of this epitaph, Czlius Calcagninus, has translated or imitated the epigrams see την Μυρωνος βουν, which are given under the name of Anacreon.

play to the inflagination, that the mind loves to include in it. But the vision dissolves before historical truth; and Chamæleon and Hermesianax, who are the source of the supposition, are considered as having merely included in a poetical anachronism.

To infer the moral dispositions of a poet from the tone of sentiment which pervades his works, is sometimes a very fallacious analogy; but the soul of Anacreon speaks so unequivocally through his odes, that we may safely consult them as the faithful mirrors of his heart. We find him there the elegant voluptuary, diffusing the seductive charm of

¹ Barnes is convinced (but very gratuitously), of the synchronism of Anacreon and Sappho. In citing his authorities, he has strangely neglected the line quoted by Fulvius Ursinus, as from Anacreon, among the testimonies to Sappho—

Ειμι λαβων εισαρας Σαπφω παρθενον άδυφωνον. Fabricius thinks that they might have been contemporary, but considers their amout as a tale of imagination. Vossius rejects the idea entirely as do also Olaus Bornchius and others.

2 An Italian poet, in some verses on Belleau's translation of Anacreon, protends to imagine that our bard did not feel as he wrote....

sentiment over passions and propensities at which rigid morality must frown. His heart, devoted to indolence, seems to have thought that there is wealth enough in happiness, but seldom happiness in mere wealth. The cheerfulness, indeed, with which he brightens his old age is interesting and endearing: like his own rose, he is fragrant even in decay. But the most peculiar feature of his mind is that love of simplicity, which he attributes to himself so feelingly, and which breathes characteristic-

Lyaum, Venerem, Cupidinemque Senex lusit Anacreon poeta. Sed quo tempore nec capaciores Rogabat cyathos, nec inquietis Urebatur amoribus, sed ipsis Tantum versibus et jocis aanabat, Nullum præ se habitum gerens amanwis.

To Love and Bacchus ever young.
While sage Anacreon touch'd the byre,
He neither felt the loves he sung.
Nor fill'd his bowl to Bacchus higher.
Those flowery days had faded long.
When youth could act the lover's part;
And passion trembled in his song.
But never, never reach'd his heart

. Remarks on Anacraon

ally throughout all that he has sung. In truth, if we omit those few vices in our estimate which religion," at that time, not ofily connived at, but consecrated, we shall be inclined to say that the disposition of our poet was amiable; that his morality was relaxed, but not abandoned; and that Virtue. with her zone loosened, may be an apt emblem of the character of Anacreon.1

Anacreon's character has been variously col-Barnes lingers on it with enthusiastic admiration; but he is always extravagant, if not sometimes also a little profane Baillet runs too much into the opposite extreme, exaggerating also the testimonies which he has consulted; and we cannot surely agree with him when he cites such a compiler as Athenaus as "un des plus savans tritiques de l'antiquité" (agement d's Seavans, M CV f

Burnes could hardly have read the passage to which he refus, when he accuses Le Fevre of having censured our poet's character in a note on Longinus; the note in question being manifest irony, in allusion to some censure passed upon Le Fevre for his Anacren. It is clear, indeed, that praise rather than consure is intimated. Johannes Vulpius (de Ctilitate Poetnei), who vindicates our poet's reputation.

Of his person and physiognomy time has preserved such uncertain memorials that at were better, perhaps, to leave the pencil to fincy; and few cin reid the Odes of Anacreon without imagining to themselves the form of the infinated old baid, crowned with roses, and singing cheerfully to his lyre. But the head of Afficieon, prefixed to this work, his been considered so authentic, that we scarcely could be justified in the omission of it; and some have ewn thought that it is by no means deficient in that benevolent spavity of expression which should characterise the countenance of such a poet.

1 It is taken from the Billiothers of Pulvius Bellon has copied the same head into Johannes Faber, in his description his Imasin of the coin of Ursinus mentions another head on i very beautiful coincling, which he supposes was worn in a ring by some didmiter of the poet the I onegrifher of Canine there is a youthful head of Antereon from a Greeian medal, with the letters TLIGE around it on the reverse there is a Neptune holding a spen in his light hand and a dolphin, with the word TIANON inscribed, in the left, "volendoer denotare Leays Canini) che quelle cittadini la coniassero in honore alel suo compatitiota poeta. There is also among the coms of De Wilde one which, though it beirs no efigy, was probably struck to the memory of Anacreon It has the word I HION, meucled with an toy crown, "At quidn't respicit hae corona Anacreontem, nobilem lyricum? '(De Wilde)

After the very enthusiartic culogiums bestowed both by ancients and moderns upon the poems of Anacreon, we need not be diffident in expressing our raptures at their beauty, nor hesitate to pronounce them the most polished temains of antiquity. They are, indeed, all beauty, all enchantment.1 He steals us so insensibly along with him, that we sympathise even in his excesses. In his amatory odes there is a delicacy of complement not to be the ancients bestowed on him the epithets sweet. delicate. graceful, ste ' (Dissertationes Academicie, de Poetis, diss. 2). Scaliger again praises him thus in a pun, speaking of the uelos, or ode, "Anacreon autem non solum dedit hæe μελη sed eriam in iinis mella " Sec the passage of Rapin, quoted by all the editors. I cannot omit citing also the following very spirited apostrophe of the author of the Commentary prefixed to the Parma adition "O vos sublimes anime, vos Apollinis alumni, qui post unum Alemanem in totà Ifellade lyricam poesim exsusertastis, coluistis, amplificastis, qui so vos in ullus unquam fuerit vates qui Leio cantou vel natura candore vel metri suavitate palmam pratipuetit." See likewise Vincenzo Gravini della Rag Poetic libroaptimo (p. 97). Among the Ritiatti of Marino, there is one of Anacieon beginning "Cingetemi la fronte," etc.

¹ Besides those which are extant, he wrothymns, elegies, epigrams, etc. 6 ome of the epigrams still exist. Herace, in addition to the mention of him (lib, iv. od. 9), alludes also to a poem of his upon the rivalry of Circe and Penelope in the affections of Ulysses (lib. i. od. 17); and the scholiagt upon Nicander cites a fragment from sa poem upon Sleep by Anacreon, and attributes to him likewise a medicinal treatise. Fulgentius mentions a work of his upon the war between Jupiter and the Titans, and the origin of the consecration of the eagle.

² See Horace, Maximus Tyrius, etc. "His style (says Scaliger) is sweeter than the juice of the Indian reed" (Post. lib. i. cap. 44). "From the softness of his verses (says Olaus Borrichius)

1. We may perceive," says Possius, " that the iteration of his words conduces very much to the sweetness of his style." Henry Stephen remarks the same beauty in a note on the forty-fourth ode. This figure of iteration is his most appropriate grace; but the modern writers of Jevenilia and Basia have adopted it to an excess which destroys the effect.

found in any_other ancient poet. Love at that period was rather an unrefined emotion: and the intercourse of the sexes was animated more by passion than by sentiment. They knew not those little tendernesses which form the spiritual part of affection: their expression of feeling was therefore rude and unvaried, and the poetry of love deprived it of its most captivating graces. • Anacreon, however, attained some ideas of this purer gallantry; and the same delicacy of mind which led him to this refinement, prevented him also from yielding to the freedom of language, which has sullied the pages of all the other poets. His descriptions are warm; but the warmth is in the ideas, not the words. He is sportive without being wanton, and ardent without being licentious. His poetic invention is always most brilliantly displayed in those allegorical fictions which so many have endeavoured to imitate, though all have confessed them to be inimitable. Simplicity is the distinguishing feature of these odes, and they interest by their innocence, as much as they fascinate by their beauty. They may be said, indeed, to be the very infants of the Muses, and to lisp in numbers.

I shall not be accessed of enthusiastic parmality by those who have read and felt the original; but, to others, I am conscious, this should not be the language of a translator, whose funt reflection of such beauties can but all justify his admiration of them.

In the age of Analicon music and portry were inseparable. These kindled talents were for a long time associated, and the poet always sung his own compositions to the lyre. It is probable that they were not set to any regular air, but rather a kind of musical recitation, which was varied according of the finey and feelings of the moment.

In the Pais edition there are four of the original odes set to music by I c Sucur, Gossee, Mehul, and Cherubini "On chante du I afin, et de I Italien, says Gail, "quelque fois mems sans les entendre qui empeche que nous ni chantions des odes Greeques". The chromatic I aining of these composers is very unlike what we are told of the simple melody of the ancients and they have all, as it appears to me mistaken the accert unition of the words.

The poems of Anacieon were sung at banquets as late as the time of Aulus Gellius, who tells us that he heard one of the odes performed at a birthday entertainment.¹

The singular beauty of our poet's style, and apparent ficility, perhaps, of his metic, have attracted, as I have already remarked, as crowd of imitators. Some of these have succeeded with wonderful felicity, as may be discerned in the few odes which are attributed to writers of a later period. But none of his emulators have been half so dangerous to his fame as those Greek ecclesiastics of their own inferiority to their great prototype, determined on removing all possibility of computson, and, under a semblance of moral zeals deprived the world of some of the most exquisite trassures of ancient times.¹ The works of Sappho and Alexus were among those flowers of Grecian literature which thus fell beneath the rude hand of ecclesiastical presumption. It is true they pretended that this sacrifice of genius was hallowed by the interests of religion; but I have already assigned the most probable motive ²; and if Gregorius Nazianzenus had not written Anacreontics, we might now perhaps have the works of the Teian unmutilated, and be empowered to say exultingly with Horace—

¹ The Parma commentator is rather earches in referring to this passing of Aulus (Gellius (lib xix cap 9). The ode was not sung by the rhetorician Juliurus as he says but by the ministrels of both seves who were introduced at the entertringent.

Nec si quid olim lusit Anacreon Delce it ætas.

1 See what Colomeoin on his Literary Treasurer has quoted from Aleyonius de Exilio; ir may be found in Baxter. Colomeoins, after citing the passage, adds, "Hæc auro contra cara non potui non apponere."

² We may perceive by the beginning of the first hymn of Bishop Synesius, that he made Anacreon and Sappho his models of composition.

> Αγε μοι, λιγεια φομμιγξ, Μετα Τηίαν αοιδαν, Μετα Λεσβιαν τε μολπαν.

Margunius and Damascenus were likewise authors of pious Auscreontics.

The zeal by which these bishops professed to be actuated gave birth more innocently, infleed, to an absurd species of parody, as repugnant to piety as it is to taste, where the poet of voluptuousness was made a preacher of the gospel, and his muse, like the Venus in armour at Lacedæmon, was arrayed in all the severities of priestly instruction. Such was the Anacreon Recuntatus, by Carolus de Aquino, a Jesuit, published in 1701, which consisted of a series of palinodes to the several songs of our poet. Such, too, was the Christian Anacreon of Patrignanus, another Jesuit,1 who preposterously tansferred to a most sacred subject all that the Grecian poet had dedicated to festivity and love.

His metre, has frequently been adopted by the modern Latin poets; and Scaliger, Taubnian, Barthius,² and others, have shown ¹ This, perhaps, is the "Jesuita quidam Græculus" alluded to by Barnes, who has himself composed au Ανακρεων Χριστιανός, as absurd as the rest, but somewhat more skilfully executed.

² I have seen somewhere an account of the MSS, of Barthius, written just after his death, which that it is by no means uncongenial with that language. The Aracreontics of Scaliger, however, scarcely deserve the name; as they glitter all over with conceita and, though often elegant, are always laboured. The beautiful fictions of Angerianus preserve more happily than any others the delicate turn of those allegorical fables, which, passing so frequently through the mediums of version and imitation, have generally lost their finest rays in the transmission. Many mentious many more Anacreontics of his than lebelieve have ever been published.

1 Thus too Albertus, a Danish Poet

Fidii tui minister
Gaudebo semper esse,
Gaudebo semper illi
Litate thure mulso;
Gaudebo semper illum
Laudate pumililis
Anacreonticillis.

-- See the Danish Posts collected by Rostgaard.

These pretty littlenesses defy translation A beautiful Anacreontic by Hugo Grotius may be found lib, i. Patraginis.

2 to Angerianus, Prior is indebted for some of his happiest mythological subjects.

of the Italian poets have indulged their fancies upon the subjects, and, in the manner of Anacreon, Bernardo Tasso first introduced the metre, which was afterwards polished and enriched by Chabriera and others. 1

To judge by the references of Degen, the German language abounds in Anacreontic imitations; and Hage lorn² is one among many who have assumed him as a model. La Farre, Chaulieu, and the other light poets of France have also professed to cultivate the muse of Téos; but they have attained all her negligence, with little of the simple grace that embellishes it. In the delicate bard of Schiras³ we find the kindred spirit of Anacreon: some of his gazelles, or songs, possess all the character of our poet.

¹ See Crescimbeni, Historia della Volg Poes.

² 11 l'aimable Hagedoin vaut quelquefois Anaciéon (Dorat, Idie de la Poesie Allemande).

³ See Toderini on the learning of the Turks, as translated by de Cournard. Prince Cantemir has made the Russians acquainted with Anacreons See his Life, prefixed to a translation of his Satires, by the Abbé de Guasco.

We come now to a retrespect of the editions of Anacreon. To Henry Stephen we are indebted for having first recovered his remains from the abscurity in which, so singularly, they had for many ages reposed. He found the seventh ode, as we are told, on the cover of an old book, and communicated it to Victorius, who mentions the circumstance in his Various Readings. Stephen was then very young; and this discovery was considered by some critics of that day as a literary imposition. In 1554, however, he gave Anacreon to the world, 2 recommand with annotations and

1 Robertellus in his work De Ritiene oring nie pronounces these verses to be the friffings of some insipid Grants

Ronsaid commemorates this event

fo vay house a Henrie Etienne

Qui des enfers nous a rendu

Du vieil Antereon perdu,

La diffice lyre feienne (Ode xv. book 5)

I fill the bowl to Stephen's name,
Who rescued from the gloom of night
I be Tean baid of festive fame,
And brought his hving lyre to light a Latin version of the greater part of the odes. The learned still hesitated to receive them as the relice of the Teian bard, and suspected them to be the fabrication of some monks of the sixteenth century. This was an idea from which the classic muse recoiled; and the Vatican manuscript, consulted by Scaliger and Salmasius, confirmed the antiquity of most of the poems. A very inaccurate copy of this MS. was taken by Isaac Vossius, and this is the authority which Barnes has followed in his collation. 'Accordingly, he misrepresents almost as often as he quotes; and the subsequent editors, relying upon his authority, have spoken of the manuscript with not less confidence than ignorance. The literary world, however, has at length been gratified with this curious mentorial of the poet, by the industry of the Abbs Spaletti, who published at Rome, in 1781, a facsimile of those pages of the Vatican manuscript which contained the Odes of Anacreon.1

This martuscript, which Spaletti thinks as old as the tenth century, was brought from the

A catalogue has been given by Gail of all the different edifions and translations of Anacreon. Finding their number to be much greater than I could possibly have had an opportunity of consulting, I shall here content myself with enumerating only those editions and versions which it has been in my power to collect; and which, though very few, are, I believe, the most important:—

The edition by Henry Stephen, 1554, at Paris; the Latin version is attributed by Colomesius to John Dorat.¹

The old French translations, by Ronsard and Belleau—the former published in 1555, Palatine into the Vatican Library; it is a kind of anthology of Greek epigrams, and in the 676th page of it are found the Ημιαμβία Συμποσιακά of Anacreou.

1 "Le même (M. Vossius) m'a dit qu'il avoit posséde un Anacréon, ou Sciffger avoit marqué de sa main qu' Henri Etienne n'étoit pas l'auteur de la version Latine des odes de ce poète, mais Jean Dorat" (Paulus Colomesius, Pasticularités). Colomesius, however, seems to have relied too implicitly on Vossius;—almost all these l'articularités begin with "M. Vossius m'a dit."

the latter in $556. It appears from a note of Muretus upon one of the sonnets of Ronsard, that Henry Stephen communicated to this poet his manuscript of Anacreon, before he promulgated it to the world.

The edition by Le Fevre, 1660.

The edition by Madame Daciei, 1681, with a prose translatior.2

The edition by Longepierre, 1884, with

The edition by Baxter; London, 1695.

A French translation by La Fosse, 1704.

L'Histoire des Odes d'Anacreon, by Gaçon; Rotterdam, 1712.

A translation in English verse, by several hands, 1713, in which the odes by Cowley are inserted.

The edition by Barnes; London, 1721.

1 ·· La fiction de ce sonnet comme l'auteur même m'a dit, est prise d'une ode d'Anaction, encoie non imprimée, qu'il a depuis traduit, Συ μεν φιλη χελιδων."

2'The author of Nouvelles de la Répub, des Lett. bestows on this translation much more praise than its merits appear to me to justify.

The edition by Dr. Trapp, 1733, with a Latin version in elegiac mette.

A translation in English verse, by John Addison, 1735.

A collection of Italian translations of Anacreop, published at Venice, 1736, consisting of those by Coisini, Regnici, Salvini, Maichetti, and one by several anonymous authors.²

A flanslation in English verse, by Fawkes and Doctor Broome, 1760.3

Another, anonymous, 1768.

1 The notes of Regnice are not inserted in this edition; but they much be interesting, as they were for the most part communicated by the ingenious Menage, who, we may perceive from a passage in the Menagrana, bestowed some research on the subject "Cleet aussi lui (M Bigot) qui s'ert donné la peine de conférci des manuscrits en Italie dans le tems que je travallois sur Anaciéon" (Menagrana, seconde partie).

21 find in Haym's Notizia de' Libri vair, Venice, 1670, an Italian translation by Cappone, men-

This is the most complete of the Loglish translations.

The edition by Spaletti, at Rome, 1781; with the facsimile of the Vatican MS.

The edition by Degen, 1786, who published also a German translation of Anacieon, esteemed the best.

A translation in English verse, by U1quhart, 1787.

The edition by Gail, at Pairs, 1700. Swith a prose translation.

ODES OF ANACREON

ODF I

I saw the smiling bard of pleasure,
The minstrel of the Teian measure;
'Twas in a vision of the night,
He beam'd upon my wondering sight.
I heard his voice, and warmly prest.
The dear enthusiast to my breast.
His tresses wore a silvery dye,
But beauty sparkled in his eye;

Sparkled in his eyes of fire, Through the mist of oft desires His lip exhal'd, whene'er he sigh'd, The fragrance of the racy tide; And, as with weak and reeling feet He came my cordial kiss to meet, An infant, of the Cyprian band, Guided him on with wnder hand. Quick from his glowing brows he drew His braid, of many a wanton hue; I took the wreath, whose inmost twine Breath'd of him and blush'd with wine. I hung it o'er my thoughtless brow, And ah! I feel its magic now: I feel that even his garland's touch Can make the bosom love too much.

11 1610

Give me the hup of epic song,
Which Homer's finger thrill'd along;
But tear away the sanguine string,
For war is not the theme I sing.
Proclaim the laws of feed rite,
I'm monuch of the board to-night;
And all around shall brim as high,
And quaff the tide as deep as I.
And when the cluster's mellowing dews
Their warm enchanting balm infuse,

Our feet shall catch th' clastic bound, And reel us through the dance's round. Great Bacchus! we shall sing to thee, In wild but sweet elaiety; Flashing around such sparks of thought, As Bacchus could alone have taught.

Then, give the half of epic song, Which Homei's finger thrill'd along; But tear away the sanguine string, For war is not the theme I sing.

ODE III

Listin to the Muse's lyie,
Master of the pencil's fire!
Sketch'd in painting's bold display,
Many a city first portray;
Many a city, revelling free, bull of loose festivity.
Picture then a rosy train,
Bacchants straying o'er the plain;
Piping, as they roam along,
Roundelay or shepherd-song.

Paint me next, if painting may Such a theme as this portray, All the earthly heaven of love These delighted mortals prove.

ODE IV

Vulcan! hear your glorious task; I do not from your labours ask In gorgeous panoply to shine, For war was ne'er a sport of mine. No-let me have a silver bowl. Where I may cradle all my soul; But mind that, o'er its simple frame No mimic constellations flame; Nor grave upon the swelling side, Otion, scowling o'er the tide. I care not for the glitt'ring wain, Not yet the weeping sister train. But let the vine luxuriant roll Its blushing tendrils oound the bowl, While many a rose-lipp'd bacchant maid Is culling clusters in their shade. Let sylvan gods, in antic shapes, Wildly press the gushing grapes, And flights of Loves, in wanton play, Wing through the air their winding way; While Venus, from her arbour green, Looks laughing at the joyous scene, And young Lyaus by her side Sits, worthy of so bright a bride.

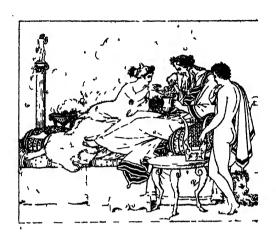

D , 40

opi v

Sculptor, wouldst thou glad my soul, Grave for me'an ample bowl,
Worthy to shine in hall or bower,
When spring-time brings the reveller's hour.
Grave it with themes of chaste design,
Fit for a simple board like mine.
Display not there the barbarous rites
In which religious zeal delights;
Nor any tale of tragic fate
Which History shudders to relate.

No-cull thy fancies from above? Themes of heav'n and tilemes of love. Let Bacchus, Jove's ambrosial boy, Distil the grape in drope of joy, And while he smiles at every tear, Let warm-ey'd Venus, dancing near, With spirits of the genial bed, The dewy herbage deftly tread. Let Love be there, without his arms, In timid nakedness of charms: And all the Graces, link'd with Love, ·Stray, laughing, through the shadowy grove; While rosy boys, disporting round, In circlets trip the velvet ground. But ah! if there Apollo toys, I tremble for the losy boys.

ODE VI

As late I 'sought the spangled bowers, To cull a wreath of matin flowers, Where many an early rose was weeping, I found the urchin Cupid sleeping. I caught the boy, a goblet's tide Was richly mantling by my side, I caught him by his downy wing, And whelm'd him in the racy spring.

Then drank I down the poison'd bowl, And Love now nessles in my soul. Oh yes, my soul is Cupid's nest, I feel him fluttering in my breast.

ODĘ VII

The women tell me every day
That all my bloom has past away.
"Behold," the pietty wantons cry,
"Behold this mirror with a sigh;
The locks upon thy brow are few,
And, like the rest, they're withering too!"
Whether decline has thinn'd my hair,
I'm sure I neither know not care;
But this I know, and this I feel,
As onward to the tomb I steal,

That still as death approaches nearer, The joys of life are sweeter, dearer; And had I but an hour to live, That little hour to bliss I'd give.

ODIs VIII

I can not for the idle state
Of Peisia's king, the rich, the great:
I cony not the monarch's throne,
Nor wish the treasur'd gold my own.
But oh! be mine the rosy wreath,
Its freshness o'er my brow to breathe;
Be mine the rich perfumes that flow,
To cool and scent my locks of snow.
To-day I'll haste to quaff my wine,
As if to-morrow ne'er would shine;

But if to-morrow comes, why then—
I'll haste to quaff my wine again.
And thus while all our days are bright,
Nor time has dinum'd their bloomy light,
I et us the festal hours beguild
With mantling cup and cordial smile;
And shed from each new bowl of wine
The richest drop on Bacchus' shrine.
For Death may come, with brow unpleasant,
May come, when least we wish him present,
And beckon to the sable shore,
And grimly bid us—drink no more!

ODE IX

I PRAY thee, by the gods above,
Give me the mighty bowl I love,
And let me sing, in wild delight,
"I will—I will be mad to-night!"
Alcmæon once, as legends tell,
Was fienzied by the fiends of hell;
Otestes too, with naked tread,
Frantic pac'd the mountain-head;
And why? a murder'd mother's shade
Haunted them still where'er they strayed.
But ne'er could I a murderer be,
The grape alone shall bleed by me;
Yet can I shout, with wild delight,
"I will—I will be mad to-night!"

Alcides' self, in days of yore, Imbiu'd his hands in youthful gore, And brancish'd, with a maniac joy, The quiver of th' expiring boy:

And Ajax, with tremendous shield, Infuriate scour'd the guiltless field. But I, whose hands no weapon ask, No armour but this joyous flask; The trophy of whose frantic hours Is but a scatter'd wreath of flowers, Ev'n I can sing with wild delight, "I will—I will be mad to-night!"

ODE X

How am I to punish thee,
For the wrong thou'st done to me,
Silly swallow, prating thing—
Shall I clip that wheeling wing?
Or, as Tercus did, of old,
(So the fabled tale is told,)
Shall I tear that tongue away,
Tongue that utter'd such a lay?
Ah, how thoughtiess hast thou been!
Long before the dawn was seen,
When a dream came o'er my mind,
Picturing her I worship, kind,
Just when I was nearly blest,
Loud thy matins broke my rest!

ODI XI

What in purchase shall I pry thee,
What in purchase shall I pry thee
For this little waxen toy,
Image of the Paphrin boy?"
Thus I said, the other day,
To a youth who pass'd my way:
"Sir," (he answer'd, and the while Answer'd all in Done style,)
"Take it, for a trifle take its
'Twas not I who dated to make it;

No, believe me, 'twas not I;
'Oh, it has cost me many a sigh,
'And I can no longer keep Little gods, who murder sleep!''
"Here, then, here," (I said with joy,)
"Here is silver for the boy:
He shall be my bosom guest,
Idol of my pious breast!"

Now, young Love, I have thee mine, Warm me with that torch of thine:
Make me feel as I have felt,
Or thy waxen frame shall melt:
I must burn with warm desire,
Or thou, my boy—In yonder fire.

ODE,XII

THIY tell how Atys, wild with love, Roams the mount and haunted grove ; Cybele's name he howls around, The gloomy blast returns the sound! Ofatoo, by Claros' hallow'd spring, The votaries of the laurell'd king Quaff the inspiring, magic stream, And rave in wild, prophetic dream. But frenzied dreams are not for me. Great Bacchus is my deity! Full of mirth, and full of him, While floating odours round me swim, While mantling bowls are full supplied, And you sit blushing by my side, I will be mad and raving too --Mad, my girl, with love for you!

ODL XIII

I will, I will, the conflict' pie,
And I'll consent to love it list.
Cupid his long, with smiling ait,
Invited me to yield my heart,
And I have thought that peace of mind
Should not be for a smile resign'd;
And so repell'd the tender lure.
And hop'd my heart would sleep secure.

But, slighted in his boasted chaims, The angry infant flew to arms ; He slung his quiver's golden frame, He took his bow, his chafts of flame, And proudly summon'd me to yield, Or meet him on the martial field. And what did I unthinking do? I took to irms, undaunted, too; Assum'd the corslet, shield, and spear, And, like Pelides, smil'd at fear. Then (hear it, all ye powers above!) I fought with Love! I fought with Love! And now his arrows all were shed, And I had just in terms fled-When, heaving an indignant sigh, To see me thus unwounded fly, And, having now no other dart, He shot himself into my heart! My heart—alis the luckless day! Receiv'd the god, and died away. Farewell, farewell, my faithless shield! Thy lord at length is fore'd to yield. Vain, vain, is every outward care, The foe's within, and triumphs there.

ODE XIA

Count me, on the summer trees, Every leaf that courts the breeze; Count me, on the foamy deep, Every wave that sinks to sleep; Then, when you have number'd fnese Billowy tides and leafy tiees, Count me all the flames 1 prove, All the gentle nymphs I love. First, of pure At'lenian maids Sporting in their olive shades, You may teckon just a score, Nay, I'll grant you fifteen more. In the fam'd Counthian grove, Where such countless wantons rove. Chains of beauties may be found, Chains, by which my heart is bound; There, indeed, are nymphs divine, Dangerous to a soul like mine. Many bloom in Lesbos' isle; Many in Ionia smile;

66

Rhodes a pretty swarm can boast; Caria too contains a host. Sum them all-of brown and fair You may count two thousand there. What, you state? I pray you, prace! More I'll find before I crase. Have P told you ill my flames, 'Mong the amorous Syrian dames? Have I numbered every one, Glowing under I gypt's sun? Or the nymphs, who blushing sweet Deck the shine of Love in Ciete: Where the god, with festal play, Holds eternal holiday? Still in clusters, still remain Gades' warm, desiring train; Still their lies a myriad more On the sable India's shore: • These, and many far remov'd, All are loving—all are loved!

ODE XV

The me, why, my sweetest, dove, Thus your humid pinions move, 'Shedding through the air in showers Essence of the balmiest flowers?' Tell me whither, whence you rove, Tell me all, my sweetest dove.

Curfous stranger, I belong To the baid of Teian song;

With his mandate now I fly To the nymph of azure eye;-She whose eye has madden'd many, But the poet more than any. Venus, for a hymn of love, Warbled in her votive grove, ('Twas in sooth a gentle lay,) Gave me to the bard away. See me now his faithful minion,--Thus with softly-gliding pinion, To his lovely girl I bear Songs of passion through the air. Oft he blandly whispers me, "Soon, my bird, I'll set you free." But in vain he'll bid me fly, I shall serve him till I die. Never could my plumes sustain Ruffling winds and chilling rain, O'er the plains, or in the dell, On the mountain's savage swell, Seeking in the desert wood Gloomy shelter, rustic food. Now I lead a life of ease, Far from rugged haunts like these. From Anacreon's hand I eat

Food delicious, viands sweet;
Flutter o'er his goblet's brinn,
Sip the foamy wind with him.
Then, when I have wanton'd round
To his lyre's begurling sound;
Or with gently-moving wings
brann'd the ministred while he sings:
On his harp I sink in slumbers,
Dreaming still of dulcet numbers

This is all—away—away—
You have made me waste the day,
How I've chatter'd !— pi iting crow
Never yet did chatter so.

ODF •XVI

Thou, whose soft and losy hues
Mimic form and soul infuse,
Best of painters, come portray
The lovely maid that's far away.
Far away, my soul thou art,
But I've thy beauties all by heart.
Paint her jetty ringlets playing,
Silky locks, like tendrils straying;
And, if painting hath the skill
To make the sprcy balm distil,

Let every little lock exhale
A sigh of perfume (in the gale.
Where her tresses' curly flow
Darkles o'er the brow of snow,
Let her forehead beam to light,
Burnish'd as the ivory bright.
Let her cycbrows smoothly rise
In jetty arches o'er her eyes,
Lach, a crescent gently glidnig,
Just commingling, just dividing.

But, hast thou any sparkles warm, The lightning of her eyes to form? Let them effuse the azure rays That in Minerva's glances blaze, Mix'd with the liquid light that lies In Cytherea's languid eyes.

O'er her nose and cheek be shed Flushing white and soften'd red; Mingling tint, as when there glows In snowy milk the bashful rose. Then her lip, so rich in blisses, Sweet petitioner for kisses, Rosy nest, where links Persuasion, Mutely courting Love's invasion.

Next, beneath the velvet chin,
Whose dumple hidgs a Love within,
Mould her neck with grace descending
In a heaven of beauty ending;
While countless chaims, above, below,
Sport and flutter round its snow.
Now let a floating, lucid veil,
Shadow her form, but not conceal;
A chaim may peep, a hue may beam,
And leave the test to Fancy's die im.
I nough—'tis she! 'tis i!! I seek,
It glows, it lives, it soon will speik!

ODB XVII

And now with all thy pencil's truth,
Portray Bathyllus, lovely youth!
Let his hair, in masses bright,
Fall like floating rays of light,
And there the raven's die confuse
With the golden sunbeam's hues.
Let no wreath, with artful twine,
The flowing of his locks confine,
But leave them loose to every breeze,
To take what shape and course they please.

Beneath the forchead, fair as snow, But flush'd with manifood's early glow, And guilcless as the dews of dawn, Let the majestic brows be drawn, Of abon huc, enrich'd by gold, Such as dark, shining snikes unfold. Mix in his eyes the power ilike, With love to win, with twe to strike, Borrow from Mars his look of the, From Venus her soft glance of fire, Blend them in such expression here, That we by turns may hope and fear!

Now from the sunny apple scck
The velvet down that spicads his cheek;
And there, if art so far cin go,
Th' ingenuous blush of boy hood show.
While, for his mouth—but no,—in s un
Would words its witching chaim explain,
Make it the very seat, the throne,
That I loquence would claim her own;
And let the lips, though silent, wear
A life-look, as if words were there.

Next thou his ivory neck must trace, Moulded with soft but manly grace;

Fair as the neck of Paphia's boy,
Where Paphia's arms have hung in joy.
Give him the winged Hermes' hand,
With which he wayes his snaky wand;
Let Bacchus' the broad chest supply,
And Leda's son the sinewy thigh;
While, through his whole transparent frame,
Thou show'st the stirtings of that flame,
Which kindles, when the first love-sigh
Steals from the heart, unconscious willy.

But sure thy pencil, though so bright,
Is envious of the eye's delight,
Or its enamour'd touch would show
The shoulder, fair as sunless snow,
Which now in veiling shadow lies,
Remov'd from all but Fancy's eyes.
Now, for his feet—but hold—forbear
I see the sun-god's portrait there;
Why paint Bathyllus? when, in truth,
There, in that god, thou'st sketch'd the youth.
Enough—let this bright form be mine,
And send the boy to Samos' shrine;
Phæbus shall then Bathyllus be,
Bathyllus then, the deity!

ODE XVIII

Now the stu of day is high.

I ly, my girls, in pity fly,

Bring me wine in brimming uins,

Cool my lip, it burns, it burns!

Sunn'd by the meridinative,

Panting, languid I expire.

Give me all those humid flowers,

Drop them o'er my brow in showers.

Scarce a breathing chaplet now

Lives upon my feverish brow;

Fivery dewy rose I wear Sheds its tears, and withers there. But to you, my burning heart, What can now relief impart? Can brimming bowl, or flowret's dew, Cool the flame that scorches you?

ODE XIX

Here recline you, gentle maid, Sweet is this embowering shade; Sweet the young, the modest trees. Ruffled by the kissing breeze; Sweet the little founts that weep, Lulling soft the mind to sleep; Hark! they whisper as they roll, Calm persuasion to the soul; Tell me, tell me, is not this All a stilly scene of bliss? Who, my girl, would pass it by? Surely neither you nor I.

ODE XX

On day the Muses cwin'd the hands Of infant Love with flow'ry bonds; And to celestial Beauty gave The captive infant for her slave. His mother comes, with many a toy, To ransom her beloved boy; His mother sues, but all in vain,— He ne'er will leave his chains again. Even should they take his chains away, The little captive still would stay. "If this," he cries, "a bondage be, Oh, who could wish for liberty?"

ODE XXI

Obstave when mother earth is dry,
She drinks the droppings of the sky;
And then the dewy cordial gives
To av'ry thirsty plant that lives.
The vapours, which at evening weep,
Are beverage to the swelling deep;
And when the rosy sun appears,
He drinks the ocean's misty tears.
The moon too quaffs her paly stream
Of lustre, from the solar beam.
Then, hence with all your sober thinking!
Since Nature's holy law is drinking;
I'll make the laws of Nature mine,
And pledge the Universe in wine.

ODE XXII

The Phrygian rock, that braves the storm, Was once a weeping matron's form; And Progne, hapless, frantic maid, Is now a swallow in the shade.
Oh! that a mirror's form were mine, That I might catch that smile divine; And like my own fond fancy be, Reflecting thee, and only thee; Or could I be the robe which holds That graceful form within its folds;

Or, turn'd into a fountain, lave Thy beauties in my circling wave. Would I were perfume for thy hair, To breathe my soul in fragrance there; Or, better still, the zone, that lies Close to thy breast, and feels its sighs. Or ev'n those envious pearls that show So faintly round that neck of snow—Yes, I would be a happy gem, Like them to hang, to fade like them. What more would thy Anacreon be? Oh, any thing that touches thee; Nay, sandals for those airy feet—Ev'n to be trod by them were sweet!

OINE XXIII "

I orran wish this languid lyre, This warbier of my soul's desire, Could raise the breath of song sublime, To men of fame, in former time. But when the soaring theme I try, Along the chords my numbers die, And whisper, with dissolving tone, "Our sighs are given to love alone!" Indignant at the feeble lay, I tore the panting chords away, Attun'd them to a nobler swell, And struck again the breathing shell; In all the glow of epic fire, To Hercules I wake the lyre. But still its fainting sighs repeat, "The tale of love alone is sweet!" Then fare thee well, seductive dream, That mad'st me follow Glory's theme: For thou my lyre, and thou my heart, Shall neyer more in spirit part; And all that one has felt so well The other shall as sweetly tell!

ODE XXIV

To all that breathe the air of heaven,
Some boon of strength has Nature given.
In forming the majestic bull,
She fenced with wreathed horns his skull;
A hoof of strength she lent the steed,
And wing'd the timorous hare with speed.
She gave the lion fangs of terror,
And, o'er the ocean's crystal mirror,
Taught the unnumber'd scaly throng
To trace their liquid path along;

While for the umbrage of the grove, She plum'd the warbling world of love.

To man she gave, in that proud hour, The boon of intellectual power. Then, what, oh woman, what, for thee, Was left in Nature's treasury? She gave thee beauty—mightier far Than all the pomp and power, of war. Nor steel, nor fire itself hath power Like woman, in her conquering hour. Be thou but fair, mankind adore thee, Smile, and a world is weak before thee!

ODE XXV

ONCE in each revolving year, Gentle bird! we find thee here. When Nature wears her summer-vest. Thou con st to weave thy simple nest; But when the chilling winter lowers, Again thou seek'st the genial bowers Of Memphis, or the shores of Nile, Where sunny hours for ever smile. And thus thy pinion rests and roves,-Alas! unlike the swarm of Loves, That brood within this hapless breast, And newer, never change their nest! Still every year, and all the year, They fix their fated dwelling here; And some their infant plumage try, And on a tender winglet fly; While in the shell, impregn'd with fires, Still lurk a thousand more desires; Some from their tiny prisons peeping, And some in formless embryo sleeping.

Thus peopled, like the vernal groves,
'My breast resouads with warbling Loves;
One urchin imps the other's feather,
Then twin-desired they wing together,
And fast as they thus take their flight,
Still other urchins spring to light.
But is there then no kindly art,
To chase these Cupids from my heart?
Ah, no! I fear, in sadness fear,
They will for ever nestle here!

ODE XXVI

Thy harp may sing of Troy's alarms,
Or tell the tale of Theban arms;
With other wats my song shall burn,
For other wounds my harp shall mourn.
'Twas not the crested warrior's dart,
That drank the current of my heart;
Nor naval arms, nor mailed steed,
Have made this vanquished bosom bleed;
No—'twas from eyes of liquid blue,
A host of quiver'd Cupids flew;
And now my heart all bleeding lies
Beneath that army of the eyes!

80

ODE XXVII

We read the flying courser's name Upon his side, in marks of flame; And, by their turban'd brows alone, The warriors of the East are known. But in the lover's glowing eyes The inlet to his bosom lies; Through them we see the small faint mark, Where Love has dropp'd his burning spark!

ODE XXVIII

As, by his Lemnian forge's fame,
The husband of the Paphian dame
Moulded the glowing steel, to form
Arrows for Cupid, thrilling warm;
And Venus, as he plied his art,
Shed honey round each new-made dart,
While Love, at hand, to finish all,
Tipp'd every arrow's point with gall;
It chanc'd the Lord of Battles came
To visit that deep cave of flame.

91

'Twas from the ranks of war he rush'd, I'is spear with many a life-drep blush'd; He saw the fiery darts, and smil'd Contemptuous at the archer-child. "What!" said the urchin, "dost thou smile? Here, hold this little dart awhile, And thou wilt find, though swift of flight, My bolts are not so feathery light."

Mars took the shaft—and, oh, thy look, Sweet Venus, when the shaft he took!—Sighing, he felt the urchin's art, And cried, in agony of heart, "It is not light—I sink with pain! Take—take thy arrow back again."
"No," said the child, "it must not be; That little dart was made for thee!"

*ODE XXIX

Y₁ s-loving is a painful thrill, And not to love more painful still; But oh, it is the worst of pain, To love and not be lov'd again! Affection now has ifed from earth, Nor fire of genius, noble birth, Nor heavenly virtue, can beguile From beauty's cheek one favouring smile. Gold is the woman's only theme, Gold is the woman's only dream. Oh! never be that wretch forgiven— Forgive him not, indignant Heaven! Whose grovelling eyes could first adore, Whose heart could pant for sordid ore. Since that devoted thirst began, Man has forgot to feel for man; The pulse of social life is dead, And all its fonder feelings fled! War too has sullied Nature's charms, For gold provokes the world to arms: And oh! the worst of all its arts. It rends asunder loving hearts.

ODE XXX

'Twas in a mocking dream of night—I fancied I had wings as light
As a young bird's, and flew as fleet;
While Love, around whose beauteous feet,
I knew not why, hung chains of lead,
Pursued me, as I trembling fled;
And, strange to say, as swift as thought,
Spite of my pinions, I was caught!
What does the wanton Fancy mean
By such a strange, illusive scene?

I fear she whispers to my breast, That you, sweet mail, have stol'n its rest; That though my fancy, for a while, Hath hung on many a woman's smile, I soon dissolv'd each passing tow, And ne'er was caught by love till now!

ODE XXXI

ARM'D with hyacinthine rod,
(Arms enough for such a god;)
Cupid bade me wing my pace,
And try with him the rapid race.
O'er many a torrent, wild and deep,
By tangled brake and pendent steep,
With weary foot I panting flew,
Till my brow dropp'd with chilly dew.
And now my soul, exhausted, dying,
To my lip was faintly flying;

66

And now I thought the spark had fled, When Cupid hover do'er my head, And, fanning light his breezy pinion, Rescued my soul from death's dominion; Then said, in accents half-reproving, "Why hast thou been a foc to loving?"

ODE XXXII

Strew me a fragrant bed of leaves, Where lotus with the myrtle weaves; And while in luxury's dream I sink, Let me the balm of Bacchus drink! In this sweet hour of revelry Young Love shall my attendant be—Drest for the task, with tunic round His snowy neck and shoulders bound, Himself shall hover by my side; And minister the racy tide!

Oh, swift as wheels that kindling roll, Our life is hurrying to the goal: A scanty dust, to feed the wind, Is all the trace 'twill leave behind. Then wherefore waste the rose's bloom Upon the cold, insensate tomb? Can flowery breeze, or odour's breath, Affect the still, cold sense of death? Oh no; I ask no balm to steep With Tragrant tears my bed of sleep: But now, while every pulse is glowing, Now let me breathe the balsam flowing; Now let the rose, with blush of fire, Upon my brow in sweets expire; And bring the rymph whose eye hath power To brighten even death's cold hour. Yes, Cupid! ere my shade retire, To join the blest elysian choir, With wine, and love, and social cheer, I'll make my own elysium here!

ODE XXXIII

'Twas noon of night, when round the pole The sullen Bear is seen to roll; And mortals, wearied with the day, Are slumbering all their cares away: An infant, at that dreary hour, Came weeping to my silent bower, And wak'd me with a piteous prayer, To shield him from the midnight air. "And who art thou," I waking cry, "That bid'st my blissful visions fly?"

"Ah, gentle sire!" the infant said, "In pity take me to thy shed;
Nor fear deceit: a lonely child
I wander o'er the gloomy wild.
Chill drops the rain, and not a ray
Illumes the dreat and misty way!"

I heard the baby's tale of woe;
I heard the bitter night-winds blow,
And sighing for his pitcous tate,
I trimm'd my lamp and op'd the gate.
'Twas Love! the little wandering sprite,
His pinion sparkled through the night.
I knew him by his bow and dart;
I knew him oy my fluttering heart.
Fondly I take him in, and raise
The dying embers' cheering blaze;
Press from his dank and clinging hair
The crystals of the freezing air,
And in my hand and bosom hold
His little fingers thrilling cold.

And now the embers' genial ray Had warm'd his anxious fears away;

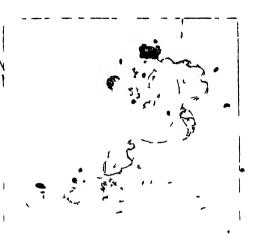

"I pray thee," said the wanton child, (My bosom trepbled as he smil'd,) "I pray thee let me try my bow, For through the ain I've wander'd so; That much I fear, the midnight shower Has injured its elastic power." The fital bow the urchin drew: Swift from the string the arrow flew: As swiftly flew as glancing flame, And to my inmost spirit came! " Fare thee well," I heard him say, As laughing wild he wing'd away: "Fare thee well, for now I know The rain has not relax'd my bow; It still can send a thrilling dart, As thou shalt own with all thy heart!"

ODE XXXIV

On thou, of all creation blest, Sweet insect, that delight'st to rest Upon the wild wood's leafy tops, To drink the dew that morning drops, And chirp thy song with such a glee, That happiest kings may envy thee. Whatever decks the velvet field, Whate'er the circling seasons yield, Whatever buds, whatever blows, For thee it buds, for thee it grows. Nor yet art thou the peasant's fear, To him thy friendly notes are dear; For thou art mild as matin dew: And still, when summer's flowery hue Begins to paint the bloomy plain, We hear thy sweet prophetic strain; Thy sweet prophetic strain we hear, And bless the notes and thee revere! The Muses love thy shrilly tone; Apollo calls thee all his own;

'Twas he who gave that voice to thee, &T is he who tunes thy minstelsy.

Unworn by age's dim decline,
The fadeless blooms of youth are thine.
Melodious insect, child of earth,
In wisdom mirthful, wise in mirth;
Exempt from every weak decay,
That withers vulgar frames away;
With not a drop of blood to stain
The current of thy purer vein;
So blest an age is pass'd by thee,
Thou seem'st-- a little deity!

ODE XXXV

Curn once upon a bed
Of roses had his wears haid,
I uckless urchir, not to see
Within the leaves a lumbering bee
The bee awak'd with anger wild
The bee awak'd, and stung the child
I oud and piteous are his cries,
To Venus quick he runs, he flies,
"Oh, mother! — I am wounded through—
I die with pun— in sooth I do!

Stung by some little angry thing,
Some serpent on a tiny wing—
A bee it was—for once, I know
I heard a rustic call it so."
Thus he spoke, and she the while
Heard him with a soothing smile;
Then said, "My infant, if so much
Thou feel the little wild-bee's touch,
How must the heart, ah, Cunid! be,
The hapless heart that's stung by thee!

ODE XXXVI

Is hoarded gold possess'd the power
To lengthen life's too fleeting hour,
And purchase from the hand of death
A little span, a moment's breath,
How I would love the precious ore!
And every hour should swell my store;
That when Death came, with shadowy pinion,
To waft me to his bleak dominion.
I might, by bribes, my doom delay,
And bid him call some distant day.

But since not all earth's golden store Can buy for us one bright hour more, Why should we vainly mourn our fate, Or sigh at life's unrertain date? Nor wealth-nor grandeur can illume. The silent midnight of the tomb.

No give to others hourded treasures - Mine be the brilli intround of pleasures: The goblet rich, the board of friends. Whose social souls the goblet blends; And mine, while yet I've life to live, Those joys that love alone can give.

HVXXX IGO

'Twas night, and many a circling bowl Had deeply warm'd my thristy soul, As lull'd in slumber I was had, Bright visions o'er my fancy play'd. With maidens, blooming as the dawn, I seem'd to skim the opening lawn, Light, on tiptoe bath'd in dew, We flew, and sported as we flew!

Some ruddy striplings, who look'd on-With cheeks, that like the wing-god's shone, Saw me chasing, tree and wild, These blooming maids, and slyly smil'd; Smil'd indeed with wanton glee, Though none could doubt they envied me. And still I flew-and now had caught The parting nymphs, and fondly thought To gather from each rosy lip: A kiss that Jove himself might sip -When sudden all my dream of joys, Blushing nymphs and laughing boys, All were gone !- "Alas!" I said, Sighing for th' illusion fled, "Again, sweet sleep, that scene restore, Oh! let me dream it o'er and o'er!"

ODI XXXVIII

Let us drain the nectar'd bowl,
Let us raise the song of soul
To him, the god who loves so well
The nectar'd bowl, the choral swell;
The god who taught the sons of earth
To thirl the tangled dance of mirth;
Him, who was nurs'd with infant Love,
And cradled in the Paphian grove;
Him, that the snowy Queen of Charms
So oft has fondled in her arms.

Oh, tis from him the transport flows, Which sweet into action knows; With him, the brow forgets its gloom, And brilliant graces learn to bloom.

Behold!-my boys a goblet bear, Whose sparkling foam lights up the air. Where are now the tear, the sigh? To the winds they fly, they fly! Grasp the bowl; in nectar sinking, Man of sorrow, drown thy thinking! Say, can the tears we lend to thought In life's account avail us aught? Can we discern with all our lore The path we've yet to journey o'er? Alas, alas, in ways so dark, 'Tis only wine can strike a spark. Then let me quaff the foamy tide, And through the dance meandering glide; Let me imbibe the spicy breath Of odours chaf'd to fragrant death; Or from the lips of love inhale A more ambrosial, richer gale! To hearts that court the phantom Care, Let him retire and shroud him there:

While we exhaust the nectar'd bowl, And swell the choral song of soul To him, the god who loves so well The nectar'd bowl, the choral swell!

ODE XXXIX

How I love the festive boy,
Tripping through the dance of joy!
How I love the mellow sage,
Smiling through the veil of age!
And when 'er this man of years
'In the dance of joy appears,
Snows may o'er his head be flung,
But his heart—his heart is young.

ODE XI

I know that Heaven hath sent me here. To run this mortal life's career: The scenes which I have journeyed o'er. Return no more—alas! no more: And all the path I've yet to go, I neither know nor ask to know. Away, then, wizard Care, nor think Thy fetters round this soul to link; Never can heart that feels with me Descend to be a slave to thee! And oh! before the vital thrill. Which trembles at my heart, is still, I'll gather Joy's luxuriant flowers, And gild with bliss my fading hours; Bacchus shall bid my winter bloom, And Venus dance me to the tomb!

ODE XLI

WHEN Spring adorns the dewy scene, How sweet to walk the velvet green, And hear the west wind's gentle sighs, As o'er the scented mead it flies! How sweet to mark the pouting vine, Ready to burst in tears of wine; And with some maid, who breathes but love, To walk, at noontide, through the grove, Or sit in some cool, green recess-Oh, is not this true happiness? 116

ODE XLII

YES, be the glorious revel mine,
Where humour sparkles from the wine.
Around me, let the youthful choir
Respond to my enlivening lyre;
And while the red cup foams along,
Mingle in soul as well as song.
Then, while I sit, with flow'rets crown'd,
To regulate the goblet's round,
Let but the nymph, our banquet's pride,
Be seated smiling by my side,

And earth has not a gift or power
That I would envy, in that hour.
Fivy!—oh, never let its blight
Touch the gay hearts met here to-night.
Far hence be slander's sidelong wounds,
Nor harsh dispute, nor discord's sounds
Disturb a scene, where all should be Attuned to peace and harmony.

Come, let us hear the harp's gay note Upon the breeze inspiring float, While round us, kindling into love, Young maidens through the light dance move. Thus blest with mirth, and love, and peace, Sure such a life should never cease!

ODE XIJH

While our rosy fillets shed
Freshness o'er each fervid head,
With many a cup and many a smile
The festal moments we beguile.
And while the harp, impassion'd, flings
Tuneful rapture from its strings,
Some airy nymph, with graceful bound,
Keeps measure to the music's sound;
Waving, in her snowy hand,
The leafy Bacchanaliun wand,

Which, as the tripping wanton flies, Trembles all over to her sight. A youth the while, with loosen'd hair, Floating on the distless air. Sings, to the wild harp's tender tone. A tale of woes, alas, his own: And oh, the sadness in his sigh, As o'er his lips the accents die! Never sure on earth has been Half so bright, so blest a scene. It seems as Love himself had come To make this spot his chosen home:-And Venus, too, with all her wiles, And Bacchus, shedding rosy smiles, All, all are here, to hail with me The Genius of Festivity!

ODE XLIV

Buds of roses, virgin flowers, Cull'd from Cupid's balmy bowers, In the bowl of Bacchus steep, Till with crimson drops they weep. Twine the rose, the garland twine, Every leaf distilling wine; Drink and smile, and learn to think That we were born to smile and drink. Rose, thou art the sweetest flower That ever drank the amber shower; Rose, thou art the fondest child Of dimpled Spring, the wood-nymph wild. Even the Gods, who walk the sky. Are amorous of thy scented sigh. Cupid, too, in Paphian shades, His hair with rosy fillet braids, When with the blushing, sister Graces, The wanton winding dance he traces.

Then bring me, showers of roses bring, And shed them o'er me while I sing, Or while, great Bacchus, round thy shrine, Wreathing my brow with rose and vine, I lead some bright nymph through the dance, Commingling soul with every glance!

ODE XLV

WITHIN this goblet, rich and deep,
I cradle all my woes to sleep.
Why should we breathe the sigh of fear,
Or pour the unavailing tear?
For death will never heed the sigh,
Nor soften at the tearful eye;
And eyes that sparkle, eyes that weep,
Must all alike be seal'd in sleep.
Then let us never vainly stray,
In search of thorns, from pleasure's way;
But wisely quaff the rosy wave,
Which Bacchus loves, which Bacchus gave;
And in the goblet, rich and deep,
Cradle our crying woes to sleep.

ODE XLVI

Behold, the young, the rosy Spring Gives to the breeze her scented wing; While virgin Graces, warm with May, Fling roses o'er her dewy way. The murmuring billows of the deep Have languish'd into silent sleep; And mark! the flitting sea-birds lave Their plumes in the reflecting wave; While cranes from heary winter fly To flutter in a kinder sky.

Now the genial star of day
Dissolves the murky clouds away;
And cultur'd field, and winding stream
Are freshly glittering in his beam.

Now the earth prolific swells With leafy buds and flowery bells; Gemming shoots the olive twine, Clusters ripe festoon the vine; An along the branches creeping, Through the velvet foliage peeping, Little infant fruits we see, Nursing into luxury.

ODE XLVII

'Tis true, my fading years decline,
Yet can I quaff the brimming wine,
As deep as any stripling fair,
Whose cheeks the flush of morning wear;
And if, amidst the wanton crew,
I'm call'd to wind the dance's clue,
Then shalt thou see this vigorous hand,
Not faltering on the Bacchant's wand,
But brandishing a rosy flask,
The only thyrsus e'er, I'll ask!

Let those who pant for Glory's charms, Embrace her in the field of arms; While my inglorious, placid soul Breathes not a wish beyond this bowl. Then fill it high, my ruddy slave. And bathe me in its brimming wave. For though my fading years decay, Though manhood's prime hath pass'd away, Like old Silenus, sire divine, With blushes borrow'd from my wine, I'll wanton 'mid the dancing train, And live my follies o'er again!

ODE XLVIII

When my thirsty soul I steep, Every sorrow's lull'd to sleep Talk of monarchs! I am then Richest, happiest, first of men; Careless o'er my cup I sing, 'Fancy makes me more than king; Gives me wealthy Crœsus' store, Can I, can I wish for more? On my velvet couch reclining, Ivy leaves my brow entwining, While my soul expands with glee, What are kings and crowns to me? If before my feet they lay, I would spurn them all away! Arm ye, arm ye, men of might, Hasten to the sanguine fight; But let me, my budding vine! Spill no other blood than thine. Yonder brimming goblet see, That alone shall vanquish meWho think it better, wiser far, To fall in banquet than in war.

ODE XLIX

When Bacchus, Jove's immortal boy, The rosy harbinger of joy,
Who, with the sunshine of the bowl,
Thaws the winter of our soul—
When to my inmost core he glides,
And bathes it with his ruby tides,
A flow of joy, a lively heat,
Fires my brain, and wings my feet,
Calling up round me visions known
To lovers of the bowl alone.

Sing, sing of love, let music's sound In melting cadence float around, While, my young Venus, thou and I Responsive to its murmurs sigh. Then, waking from our blissful trance, Again we'll sport, again we'll dance.

ODE L

Whin wine I quaff, before my eyes Dreams of poetic glory rise; . And, freshen'd by the goblet's dews, My soul invokes the heavenly Muse. When wine I drink, all sorrow's o'er; I think of doubts and fears no-more; But scatter to the railing wind Each gloomy phantom of the mind. When I drink wine, th' ethereal boy, Bacchus himself, partakes my joy;

And while we dance through vernal bowers, Whose ev'ry breath comes fresh from flowers, In wine he makes my senses swim, Till the gale breathes of nought but him!

Again Ldrink, and, lo, there seems A calmer light to fill my dreams; The lately ruffled wreath I spread With steadier hand around my head; Then take the lyre, and sing "how blest The life of him who lives at rest!" But then comes witching wine again, With glorious woman in its train; And, while rich perfumes round me rise, That seem the breath of woman's sighs, Bright shapes, of every hue and form, Upon my kindling fancy swarm, Till the whole world of beauty seems To crowd into my dazzled dreams! When thus I drink, my heart refines, And rises as the cup declines; Rises in the genial flow, That none but social spirits know, When, with young revellers, round the bowl, The old themselves grow young in soul!

Oh, when I drink, trpe joy is mine, There's bliss in every drop of wine. All other blessings I have known, I scarcely dar'd tozcall my own; But this the Fates can ne'er destroy, Till death o'ershadows all my joy;

ODE LI

For not thus, my brow of snow, Lovely wanton! fly not so. Though the wane of age is mine, Though youth's brilliant flush be thine, Still I'm doom'd to sigh for thee, Blest, if thou couldst sigh for me! See, in yonder flowery braid, Cull'd for thee, my blashing maid,

How the rose, of orient glow, Mingles with the lily's snow; Mark, how sweet their tints agree Just, my girl, like thee and me!

ODE LIL

Away, away, ye men of rules,
What have I to do with schools?
They'd make me learn, they'd make me think,
But would they make me love and drink?
Teach me this, and let me swim
My soul upon the gobler's brim;
Teach me this, and let me twine
Some fond, responsive heart to mine,
For age begins to blanch my brow,
I've time for nought but pleasure now.

Fly, and cool my toblet's glow At, yonder fountain's gelid flow; I'll quaff, my boy, and calmly sink This soul to slumber as I drink. Soon, too soon, my jocund slave, You'll deck your master's grassy grave; And there's an end—for ah, you know They drink but little wine below!

ODE LIU

With a I behold the festive train
Of dancing youth, I'm young again!
Memory wakes her magic trance,
And wirgs me lightly through the dance.
Come, Cybeba, smiling maid!
Cull the flower and twine the braid;
Bid the blush of summer's rose
Burn upon my forehead's snows;
And let me, while the wild and young
Trip the mazy dance along,

Fling my heap of years away,
And be as wild, as young, as they.
Hither haste, some cordial soul!
Help to my lips the brimming bowl;
And you shall see this hoary sage
Forget at once his locks and age.
He still can chant the festive hymn,
He still can kiss the goblet's brim;
As deeply quaff, as largely fil!,
And play the fool right nobly still.

ODE LIV

MITHING, the pictur'd bull we see. Is amorous Jove--it must be he! How fondly blest he seems to bear. That fairest of Phoenician fair! How proud he breasts the foamy tide, And spuns the billowy surge aside! Could any beast of vulgar vein, Uncounted thus defy the main! No: te descends from climes above, He looks the God, he breathes of Jove

ODE 1X

While we invoke the wreathed spring, Resplendent rose! to thee we'll sing; Resplendent rose, the flower of flowers, Whose breath perfumes th' Olympian bowers; Whose virgin blash, of chasten'd dye, Enchants so much our mortal eye. When pleasure's spring-tide season glows, The Graces love to wreathe the rose; And Venus, in its fresh-blown leaves, An emblem of herself perceives.

Oft hath the poet's magic tongue. The rose's fair luxuriance sung;
And long the Muses, heavenly maids,
Have rear'd it in their tuneful shades.
When, at the early glance of morn,
It sleeps upon the glittering thorn,
'Tis sweet to due the tangled fence,
To cull the timid flow'ret thence,
And wipe with tender hand away.
The test that on its blushes lay!
'Tis sweet to hold the infinit stems,
Yet dropping with Aurora's gem,
And fresh inhale the sprey sighs.
That from the weeping buds arise.

When revel reigns, when mith is high, And Bacchus beams in every eye,
Our rosy fillets scent exhale,
And fill with balm the fainting gale.
There's nought in nature bright or gay,
Where roses do not shed their ray.
When morning paints the orient skies,
Her fingers burn with roseate dyes;
Young nymphs betray the rose's hite,
O'r whitest arms it kindles through.

In Cytherea's form it glows, And mingles with the living snows.

The rose distils a healing balm, The beating pulse of pain to calm; Preserves the cold inurned clay. And mocks the vestige of decay: And when at length, in pale decline, Its florid beauties fade and pine, Sweet as in youth, its balmy breath *Diffuses odour even in death! Oh! whence could such a plant have sprung Listen, -- for thus the tale is sung. When, humid, from the silvery stream, I flusing beauty's warmest beam, Venus appear'd, in flushing hues, Mellow'd by ocean's briny dews; When, in the starry courts above, The pregnant brain of mighty Jove Disclos'd the nymph of azure glance, The nymph who shakes the martial lance ;-Then, then, in strange eventful hour, The earth produc'd an infant flower, Which sprung, in blushing glories drest, And wanton'd o'er its parent breast.

The gods beheld this bulliant birth, And hail'd the Rose, the boon of earth! With nectar drops, a ruby lide, The sweetly orient buds they dyed, And bade them bloom, the flowers divine Of him who gave the glorious vine; And bade them on the spangled thorn Expand their bosoms to the morn.

ODE LVI

HE, who instructs the youthful crew To bathe them in the brimmer's dew, And taste, uncloy'd by rich excesses, All the bliss that wine possesses; He, who inspires the youth to bound Elastic through the dance's round,—Bacchus, the god again is here, And leads along the blushing year; The blushing year with vintage teems, Ready to shed those cordial streams,

Which, sparkling in the cup of mirth; Illuminate the sons of earth!

Then, when the ripe and vermil wine, Blest infant of the pregnant vine; Which now in mellow clusters swells, Oh! when it bursts its roseate cells, Brightly the joyous stream shall flow, To balsam every mortal woe! None shall be then east down or weak, For health and joy shall light each cheek; No heart will then desponding sigh, For wine shall bid despondence fly. Thus—till another autumn's glow Shall bid anoth r vintage flow.

ODE LVII

WHOSE was the artist hand that spread Upon this disk the ocean's bed? And, in a flight of fancy, high As aught on earthly wing can fly, Depicted thus, in semblance warm, The Queen of Love's voluptuous form Floating along the silv'ry sea In beauty's naked majesty!

Oh! he hath given the enamour'd sight A witching banquet of delight,
Where, gleaming through the waters clear,
Glimpses of undreamt charms appear,
And all that mystery loves to screen,
Fancy, like Faith, adores unseen.

Light as a deaf, that on the breeze of summer skims the glassy seas,
She floats along the ocean's breast,
Which undulates in sleepy rest;
While, stealing on, she gently pillows
Her bosom on the heaving billows.
Her bosom, like the dew-wash'd rose,
Her neck, like April's sparkling snows,
Illume the liquid path she traces,
And burn within the stream's embraces.
Thus on she moves, in languid pride,
Encircled by the azure tide,
As some fair lily o'er a bed
Of violets bends its graceful head.

Beneath their queen's inspiring glance, The dolphins o'er the green sea dance,

Bearing in triumpl. young Desire,
And infant I ove with smiles of fire!
While, glittering through the silver waves,
The tenants of the briny caves
Around the pomp their gambols play,
And gleam along the watery way.

ODE LVIII

When Gold, as fleet as zephyr's pinion, Escapes like any faithless minion, And flies me (as he flies me ever), Do I pursue him?—never, never! No, let the false deserter go, For who would court his direst foe? But, when I feel my lighten'd mind No more by grovelling gold confin'd, Then loose I all such clinging cares, And cast them to the vagrant airs. Then feel I, too, the Muse's spell, And wake to life the dulcet shell, Which, rous'd once more, to beauty sings, While love dissolves along the strings!

But, scarcely has my heart been taught How little Gold deserves a thought, When, lo! the slave returns once more, And with him wafts delicious store

Of racy wine, whose genial art In slumber seeds the anxious heart. Again he tries my soul to sever From love and song, perhaps for ever!

Away, deceiver! why pursuing Ceaseless thus my heart's endoing? Sweet is the song of amorous fire, Sweet the sighs that thrill the lyre; Oh! sweeter far than all the gold Thy wings can waft, thy mines can hold. Well do I know thy arts, thy wiles—They wither'd Love's young wreathed smiles;

And o'er his lyre such darkness shed, I thought its soul of song was fled!

They dash'd the wine-cup, that, by him, Was filled with kisses to the brim.

Go—fly to haunts of sordid men,
But come not near the bard again.

Thy glitter in the Muse's shade,
Scares from her bower the tuneful maid;
And not for worlds would I forego

That moment of poetic glow,

When my full soul, in Fancy's stream, Pours o'er the lyre its swelling theme. Away, away! to worldlings hence, Who feel not this diviser sense; Give gold to those who love that pest,—But leave the poet poor and blest.

ODE LIX

RIPIN'D by the solar beam, Now the juddy clusters teem, In osier baskets borne along By all the festal vintage throng Of rosy youths and virgins fair, Ripe as the melting fruits they bear. Now, now they press the pregnant grapes. And now the captive stream escapes, In fervid tide of nectar gushing, And for its bondage proudly blushing! While, round the vat's impurpled brim, The choral song, the vintage hymn Of rosy youths and virgins fair, Steals on the chaim'd and echoing air. Mark, how they drink, with all their eyes, The orient tide that sparkling flies, The infant Bacchus, boin in mirth, While Love stands by, to hail the birth.

When he, whose verging yours decline
As deep into the vale is mine,
When he inhales the vintage-cup,
His feet, new-wing'd, from cuth spring up,
And as he dinees, the frech in a
Plays whispering through his silvery him.
Meinwhile youn, from whom I overnites,
To joys ev'n rivilling wine's delight,
Seek, tim up tim, the slidowy grove,
And there, in words and looks of love,
Such as fond lovers look and say,
Pass the sweet moonlight hours away!

I show well required with the right need hardly be remind. I that in the of we is building verses. I have thought right to give only the general meaning if my author leaving the details and ouched.

ODE LX

Awaki to life, my sleeping shell,
To Phorbus let thy numbers swell;
And though no glorious prize be thine,
No Pythian wreath around thee twine,
Yet every hour is glory's hour
To him who gathers wisdom's flower.
Then wake thee from thy voiceless slumbers,
And to the soft and Phrygian numbers,
Which, tremblingly, my lips repeat,
Send echoes from thy chord as sweet.
'Tis thus the swan, with fading notes,
Down the Cayster's current floats,
While amorous breezes linger round,
And sigh responsive sound for sound.

Muse of the Lyre! illume my dream, Thy Phœbus is my fancy's theme; And hallow'd is the harp I bear, And hallow'd is the wreath I wear, Hallow'd by him, the god of lays, Who modulates the choral maze. I sing the love which Daphne twin'd Around the godhead's yielding mind; I sing the blushing Daphne's flight From this ethereal son of Light: And how the tender, timid maid Flew trembling to the kindly shade, Resign'd a form, alas, too fair, And grew a verdant laurel there; Whose leaves, with sympathetic thrill, In terror seem'd to tremble still! The god pursu'd, with wing'd desire; And when his hopes were all on fire, And when to clasp the nymph he thought, A lifeless tree was all he caught; And, stead of sighs that pleasure heaves, Heard but the west wind in the leaves!

But pause, my soul, no more, no more— Enthusiast, whither do I soar? This sweetly-mad'ning dream of soul Hath hurried me beyond the goal. Why should I sing the mighty darts Which fly to wound celestial hearts,

ı

When, ah, the song, with sweeter tone,
Can tell the darts that wound my own?
Still be Anacreon, still mappine
The descint of the Teian lyre:
Still let the rectar'd numbers float,
Distilling love in every note!
And when some youth, whose glowing soul
Has felt the Paphian stil's control,
When he the liquid lays shall hear,
His heart will flutter to his car,
And, drinking there of song divine,
Banquet on intellectual wine!

ODE LXI

You'h's endearing charms are fled; Hoary locks deform my head; Bloomy graces, dalliance gay, All the flowers of life decay. Withering age begins to trace Sad memorials o'er my face; Time has shed its sweetest bloom, All the future must be gloom. This it is that sets me sighing; Dreary is the thought of dying! Lone and dismal is the road, Down to Pluto's dark abode; And, when once the journey's o'er, Ah! we can return no more!

OPE LXII

FILL me, boy, as deep a draught As e'er was fill'd, as e'er was quafi'd; But let the water amply flow, To cool the grape's intemperate glow; Let not the fiery god be single, But with the nymphs in union mingle. For though the bowl's the grave of sadness, Ne'er let it be the birth of madness. No. banish from our board to-night The revelries of rude delight; To Scythians leave these wild excesses, Ours be the joy that soothes and blesses! And while the temperate bowl we wreathe, In concert let our voices breathe, Beguiling every hour along With harmony of soul and song.

ODE LXIII

To Love, the soft and blooming child, I touch the harp in descant wild;
To Love, the babe of Cyprian bowers,
The boy, who breathes and blushes flowers;
To Love, for heaven and earth adore him,
And gods and mortals bow before him!

ь 161

ODE LXIV

HASTE thee, nymph, whose well-aimed spear Wounds the fleeting mountain-deer!
Dian, Jove's immortal child,
Huntress of the savage wild!
Goddess with the sun-bright hair!
Listen to a people's prayer.
Turn, to Lethe's river turn,
There thy vanquish'd people mourn!
Come to Lethe's wavy shore,
Tell them they shall mourn no more.
Thine their hearts, their altars thine;
Must they, Dian—must they pine?

ODE LXV

LIKE some wanton filly sporting, Maid of Thrace, thou fly'st my courting. Wanton filly? tell me why Thou trip'st away, with scornful eye, And seem'st to think my doting heart Is novice in the bridling art? Believe me, girl, it is not so; Thou'lt find this skilful hand can throw The reins around that tender form. However wild, however warm. Yes-trust me, I can tame thy force, And turn and wind thee in the course. Though, wasting now thy careless hours, Thou sport amid the herbs and flowers, Soon shalt thou feel the rein's control, And tremble at the wished-for goal!

ODE LXVI

To thee, the Queen of nymphs divine, Fairest of all that fairest shine; To thee, who rul'st with darts of fire This world of mortals, young Desire! And oh! thou nuptial Power, to thee Who bear'st of life the guardian key, Breathing my soul in fervent praise, And weaving wild my votive lays, For thee, O Queen! I wake the lyre, For thee, thou blushing young Desire, And oh! for thee, thou nuptial Power, Come, and illume this genial hour.

Look on thy bride, too happy boy, And while thy lambent glance of joy Plays over all her blushing charms, Delay not, snatch her to thine arms, Before the lovely, trambling prey, Like a young bidling, wing away!

Turn, Stratocles, too happy youth,
Dear to the Queen of amerous truth,
And dear to her, whose yielding zone
Will soon resign her all thine own.
Turn to Myrilla, turn thine eye,
Breathe to Myrilla, breathe thy sigh.
To those bewitching beauties turn;
For thee they blush, for thee they burn.

Not more the rose, the queen of flowers,
Outblushes all the bloom of bowers,
Than she unrivall'd grace discloses,
The sweetest rose, where all are roses.
Oh! may the sun, benignant, shed
His blandest influence o'er thy bed;
And foster there an infant tree,
To bloom-like her, and tower like thee!

ODE LXVU

RICH in bliss, I proudly scorn
The wealth of Amalthea's horn;
Nor should I ask to call the throne
Of the Tartessian prince my own;
To totter through his train of years
The victim of declining fears.
One little hour of joy to me
Is worth a dull eternity!

ODE LXVIII

Now Neptune's month our sky deforms,
The angry night-cloud teems with storms;
And savage winds, infuriate driven,
Fly howling in the face of heaven!
Now, now, my friends, the gathering gloom
With roseate rays of wine illume:
And while our wreaths of parsley spread
Their fadeless foliage round our head,
Let's hymneth' almighty power of wine,
And shed libations on his shrine!

ODE LXIX

They wove the lotus band to deck
And fan with pensile wreath each neck;
And every guest, to shade his head,
Three little fragrant chaplets spread;
And one was of th' Egyptian leaf.
The rest were roses, fair and brief.
While from a golden vase profound.
To all on flowery beds around,
A Hebe, of celestial shape,
Pour'd the rich droppings of the grape.

ODE LXX

A BROKEN cake, with honey sweet, Is all my spare and simple treat:
And while a generous bowl I crown To float my little banquet down, I take the soft, the amorous lyre, And sing of love's delicious fire:
In mirthful measures warm and free, I sing, dear maid, and sing for thee!

ODE LXXI

With twenty chords my lyre is hung, And while I wake them all for thee, Thou, O maiden, wild and young, Disport'st in airy levity.

The nursling fawn, that in some shade
Its antler'd mother leaves behind,
Is not more wantonly afraid,
More timid of the rustling wind!

ODE LXXII

FARE thee well, perfidious maid,
My soul, too long on earth delay'd,
Delay'd, perfidious girl, by thee,
Is on the wing for liberty.
I fly to seek a kindlier sphere,
Since thou hast ceas'd to love me here!

ODE LXXIII

Awhile I bloom'd, a happy flower, Till Love approach'd one fatal hour, And made my tender branches feel The wounds of his avenging steel. Then lost I fell, like some poor willow That falls across the wintry billow!

ODE LXXIV

Monarch Love, resistless boy,
With whom the rosy Queen of Joy,
And nymphs, whose eyes have heaven's hue,
Disporting tread the mountain-dew;
Propitious, oh! receive my sighs,
Which, glowing with entreaty, rise,
That thou wilt whisper to the breast
Of her I love thy soft behest;
And counsel her to learn from thee,
That lesson thou hast taught to me.
Ah! if my heart no flattery tell,
Thou'lt own I've learn'd that lesson well!

· ODE LXXV

Spirit of Love, whose locks unroll'd Stream on the breeze like floating gold; Come, within a fragrant cloud Blushing with light, thy votary shroud; And, on those wings that sparkling play, Waft, oh, waft me hence away! Love! my soul is full of thee, Alive to all thy luxury. But she, the nymph for whom I glow, The lovely Lesbian mocks my woe; Smiles at the chill and hoary hues, That time upon my forchead strews. Alas! I fear she keeps her charms, In store for younger, happier arms!

ODE LXXVI

HITHER, gentle Muse of mine,
Come and teach thy votary old
Many a golden hymn divine,
For the nymph with vest of gold.

Pretty nymph, of tender age,
Fair thy silky locks unfold;
Listen to a hoary sage,
Sweetest maid, with vest of gold!

Odes of Anacreon

ODE LXXVII

Would that I were a tuneful lyre, Or burnish'd ivory fair, Which, in the Dionysian choir, Some blooming boy should bear!

Would that I were a golden vase,
That some bright nymph might hold
My spotless frame, with blushing grace,
Herself as pure as gold!

Odes of Anactron

ODE LXXVIII

WHIN Cupid sees how thickly now The snows of Time fall o'er my brow, Upon his wing of golden light He passes with an eaglet's flight, And flitting or wards seems to say, "Fare thee well, thou'st had thy day!"

ADDENDA

Cupid, whose lamp has lent the ray,
That lights our life's meandering way,
That God, within this bosom stealing,
Hath waken'd a strange, mingled feeling,
Which pleases, though so sadly teasing,
And teases, though so sweetly pleasing!

Barnes, 125th. This is in Scaliger's Pactics. Gail has omitted it in his collection of fragments.

LET me resign this wretched breath, Since now remains to me No other balm than kindly death, To sooth my misery!

This fragment is extant in Arsenius and Hephastion. See Barnes (69th), who has arranged the metre of it very skilfully.

Addenda

I know thou lov'st a brimming measure,
And art a i.indly, cordial host;
But let me fill and drink at pleasure—
Thus I enjo the goblet most.

Barnes, 72nd. This fragment, which is found in Athenaus, contains an excellent lesson for the votaries of Jupiter Hospitalis.

I HAR that love disturbs my rest,
Yet feel not love's impassion'd care;
I think there's madness in my breast,
Yet cannot find that madness there!

Found in Hephastion (see Barnes, 95th), and reminds one somewhat of the following:—

Odi et amo; quare id faciam fortasse requiris; Nescio: sed fieri sentio. et excrucior (Carm. 53).

I love thee and hate thee, but if I can tell

The cause of my love and my hate, may I die.
I can feel it, alas! I can feel it too well,

That I love thee and hate thee, but cannot tell why.

Addend

From dread Leucadia's frowning steep, I'll plunge into the whitching deep:
And there lie cold, to death resign'd,
Since Love intoxicates my mind!

This is also in Hephæstion, and perhaps is a fragment of some poem, in which Anacreon had commemorated the fate of Sappho. It is the 123rd of Barnes.

Mix me, child, a cup divine,
Crystal water, ruby wine:
Weave the frontlet, richly flushing,
O'er my wintry temples blushing.
Mix the brimmer—Love and I Shall no more the contest try.
Here—upon this holy bowl,
I surrender all my soul!

Collected by Barnes, from Demetrius Phalareus and Eustathius, and subjoined in his edition to the epigrams attributed to our poet. And here is the last of those little scattered flowers, which I thought I might venture with any grace to transplant;—happy if it could be said of the garland which they form, To δ' ως' Ανακρεοντος.

EPIGR AMS

Among the Epigrams of the Anthologia are found some panegyrics on Anacreon, which I had translated, and originally intended as a sort of Coronis to this work. But I found. Spon consideration, that they wanted variety; and that a frequent recurrence, in them, of the same thought, would render a collection of such poems uninteresting. I shall take the liberty, however, of subjoining a few, selected from the number, that I may not appear to have totally neglected those ancient tributes to the fame of Anacreon. four epigrams which I give are imputed to Antipater Sidonius. They are rendered, perhaps, with too much freedom; but, designing originally a translation of all that are extant on the subject, I endeavoured to enliven their uniformity by sometimes indulging in the liberties of paraphrase.

Epigrank

ΑΝΤΙΠΑΤΡΟΥ ΣΙΔΩΝΙΟΥ, ΕΙΣ ΑΝΑΚΡΕΟΝΤΑ.

ΘΛΛΛΟΙ Υετρακορυμβος, Λιακρεον, αμφι σε κισσος

άβρα τε λεφιωνων πορφυρεων πεταλα πηγαι δ' αργίνοεντος αναθλιβουντο γαλακτος, ευωδες δ' απο γης ήδυ χεοιτο μεθυ, οφρα κε τοι σποδιη τε και οιττεα τερψιν αρηται, ει δε τις φθιμενοις χριμπτεται ευφροσυνα, ω το φιλον στερξας, φιλε, βαρβιτον, ω συν αοιδα παντα διαπλωσας και συν ερωτι βιον.

Around the tomb, oh, bard divine!
Where soft thy hallow'd brow reposes,
Long may the deathless ivy twine,
And summer spread her waste of roses!

And there shall many a fount distil,
And many a rill refresh the flowers;
But wine shall be each purple rill,
And every fount be nilky showers.

[†]Ipigrams

Thus, shade of h'm, whom Nature taught
To tune his lyle and soul to pleasure,
Who gave to love his tenderest thought,
Who gave to love his fondest measure,—

Thus, after death, if shades can feel,
Thou may'st, from odours round thee streaming,

A pulse of past enjoyment steal; And live again in blissful dreaming!

Antipates Sidonius, the author of this epigram, lived, according to Vossius, de Poetro Graere, in the second year of the 169th Olympiad. He appears, from what Cicero and Quintilian have said of him, to have been a kind of improvisatore (see Institut. Orat. lib. x. cap. 7). There is nothing more known respecting this poet, except some particulars about his illness and death, which are mentioned as curious by Pliny and others;—and there remain of his works but a few epigrams in the Anthologia, among which are found these inscriptions upon Anacreon. These remains have been sametimes imputed to another poet of the same name, of whom Vossius gives us the following account. "Antipater Thessalonicensis vixit tempore Augusti Cæsaris, ut qui saltantem viderit Pyladem, sicut constat ex quodam ejus epigrammate Ανθολογιαs, lib. iv. tit. εις ορχεστριδας. At eum ac Bathyllum primos fuisse pantomimos ac sub Augusto claruisse, satis notum ex Dione, etc. etc."

¹ Pletaque ta nen The salonicensi tribuenda videntur (Brunck, Lectiones et Emelidat.).

Epigrams'

The reader who thinks it worth observing, may find a strange oversight in Hoffman's quotation of this article from Vossius, Levic, Univers. By the omission of a sentence he has made Vossius assert that the poet Antipater was one of the first pantomime dancers in Rome.

Barnes, upon the epigram before us, mentions a version of it by Brodaus, which is not to be found in that commentator; but he more than once confounds Brodaus with another annotator on the Anthologia, Vincentius Obsopœus, who has given a translation of the epigram.

ipigrams

TOY ATTOY, EIZ TON ATTON.

Hiri sleeps Anacieon, in this wied shade; Here mute in death the Teian swan is laid. Cold, cold that heart, which while on earth it dwelt

All the sweet frenzy of love's passion felt.

. . . the Teran swan is laid.] Thus Horace of Pindai --

Multa Direaum levat aura cycnum.

A swan was the hieroglyphical emblem of a poet. Anacteon has been called the swan of Teos by another of his eulogists.

> Εν τοις μελιχροις 'Ιμεροισι συντροφον Λυαΐος Ανακρεοντα, Τηιον κυκνον, Εσφηλας ύγρη ιεκταρος μεληδονη. Ευγενους, Ανθολογ.

Epigram

And yet, oh Bard! thou art not mute in death,
Still do we catch thy-lyre's luxurious breath;

God of the grape! thou hast bettay'd
In wine's bewildering dream,
The fairest swan that ever play'd
Along the Muse's stream!
The Teian, nurs'd with all those honey'd boys,
The young Destres, light Loves, and rose-lipp'd Joys!

Still do we eatch thy lyre's laxurous breath; | 'I has Simonides, speaking of our poet -

Μολπης δ' ου ληθη με\ιτερπευς α\\' ετι κεινο Βαρβίτον ουδε θανων ευνασεν ειν αιδη. Σιμονίδοι, Ανθολογ.

Nor yet are all his numbers mute, Though dark within the tomb he lies; But living still, his amorous lute With sleepless animation sighs!

This is the famous Simonides whom Plato styled "divine," though Le Fevie, in his Poetes Gres, supposes that the epigrams under his name are all falsely imputed. The most considerable of his remains is a satirical poem upon women, preserved by Stobæus, ψογος γυναικων.

We may judge from the lines I have just quoted, and the import of the epigram belove us, that the

Hpigrams

And still thy son's of soft Bathylla bloom, Green as the ivy ound thy mouldering tomb. Not yet has death obscured thy fire of love, For still it lights thee through the elysian grove;

Where dreams are thine, that bless th' elect alone.

And Vanus calls there even in death her own!

works of Anacieon were perfect in the times of Simonides and Antipater. Obsopacis, the commentator here, appears to exult in their destruction, and, telling us they were burned by the bishops and patriarchs, he idds, "nee sane id necquiequam fecerunt," attributing to this outrage an effect which it could not possibly have produced.

Epigram₄

TOY ATTOY, EIN TO ₹ ATTON.

ΞΕΙΝΕ, ταφον παρα λι?ον Ανακρειουτος αμειβων,

Ει τι το εκ βιβλων ηλθεν εμων οφελος, Σπεισον εμη σποδιη, σπεισον γανος, οφρακεν οινω

Οστεα γηθησε ταμα νοτίζομενα,
'Ως ὁ Διονυσου μεμελημείος ουασι κωμος,
'Ως ὁ φιλακρητου συντροφος άρμονιης,
Μηδε καταφθιμενος Βακχον διχα τουτον ύποισω

Τον γενεη μεοοπων χωρον οφειλομενον.

On stranger! if Anacreon's shell Has ever taught thy heart to swell With passion's throb or pleasure's sigh, In pity turn, as wandering nigh,

The spirit of Anacreon is supposed to utter these verses from the tomb,— somewhat "mutatus ab illo," at least in simplicity of expression.

. . . If Anacreon's shell

Has ever taught thy heart to evell, etc.] We may guess from the words ω βιβλων εμων, that

, Epigrams

And drop thy koblet's richest tear In tenderest lifation here!

Anacreon was not merely a writer of billets-doux, as some French critics have called him. Amongst the e, M. La Fevre, with all his professed admiration, has given our poet a character by no means of an elevated cast

Aussi c'est pour cela que la posterite L'a toujours justement d'age en age chanté Comme un franc goguenard, amí de goinfierie, Ami de billets-dous et de badinerie.

See the verses prefaced to his Poter Gras. This is unlike the language of Theocritus, to whom Anacreon is indebted for the following simple culogium—

EIZ ANAKPEONTOZ ANAPIANTA.

Θασαι τον ανδριαντα τουτον. ω ξεγε, σποιδα, και \εγ', επαν ες οικον ενθης. Ανακρουτος εικον' ειδον εν Τεω, των προσθ' ει τι περισσον ωδοποιων. προσθεις δε χώτι τοις νεοισιν άδετο, ερεις ατρεκεως ολον τον ανδρα.

UPON THE STATUE OF ANACREON.

Stranger! who near this stitue chance to roam, it awhile your sudious eyes engage;

Epigrams.

So shall my sleeping ishes thill With visions of enjoyment still. Not even in death can I resign. The festal joys that once were mine, When Humony pursu'd my ways, And Bacchus winton'd to my lays. Oh! if delight could chaim no more, If all the goblet's blis were o'er,

That you may say actuming to you home Of vescen the image of the Term sage, Best of the bards who leek the Mules page Then of you all, that striplings loved him well

You tell them all he was and aptly tell

I have endersoured to do justile to the simplicity of this inscription by rendering it is literally. I believe, as a yease translation will allow.

Ant h j tl j d't i h t t i etc] Thus Simonides in moth i of his epitaphs on offr poet —

λαι μιν αει τεγγοι νοτερη δροτυς, ης ο γεραιθς Λαροτερον μαλακων επιτέν εκ στοματων

Let vines in clustering beauty wreith d Drop all their treisures on his head, Whose lips a dew of sweepless breath d, Richer than vine hath ever shed!

10

N

* Epigrams

When fate hat once our doom decreed, Then dying would be death indeed; Nor could I think, unblest by wine, Divinity itself divine!

An1 Bachus reanton'd to my laye, etc.] The original here is corrupted, the line ως ὁ Διονυσου, etc., is unintelligible

Breack's emendation improves the sense, but I doubt if it can be commended for elegance. Hureads the line thus-- ώς ο Διωνισοίο λελασμένος ουποτέ κωμών (see Brunck, Anal. ta Veter. Pet., Gric., vol. ii.).

Epigram[§]

TOY ATTOY, EIS TON ATTON.

ΕΤΔΕΙΣ εν φθιμενοίσιν, • Ανακρεον, εσθλα πονησας εὖδει δ' ή γλυκερη νυκτιλαλος εμθαρα, • εὖδει και Σμερδις, το Ποθων εαρ, ώ συ μελισδων, βαρβιτ', ανεκρουου υεκταρ εναρμουιου. - ηϊθεων γαρ Ερωτος εφυς σκοπος' ες δε σε μουνον τοξα τε και σκολιας ειχεν έκηβολιας.

At length thy golden hours have wing'd their flight,

And drowsy death that cyclid steepeth; Thy harp, that whisper'd through each lingering night,

New mutely in oblivion sleepeth!

Thy harp, that whisper'd through each lingering nighter etc.] In another of these poems, "the nightlyspeaking lyre" of the bard is represented as not yet silent even after his death."

ώς ό φιλακρητος τε και οινοβαρης φιλοκωμος παννιχιος κρουοι¹ την φιλοπαιδα χελιν. Σιμωνιδου, εις Ανακρεοντα.

¹ Brunck has xpower; but xpown, the common reading, better suits a detached quotation.

Epigrams ·

She too, for whom that harp profusely shed.

The purest nectar of its numbers,.

She, the young spring of thy desires, hath fled,

'And with her blest Anacieon slumbers!

To beauty's smile and wine's delight, To joys he loy done with so well S. Il shall his spirit, all the night, Attune the wild, terral shell!

Sh, the year, quant of thy Isa, etc.] The original, to Holbur cap, is beautiful. We regret that such praise should be livished so preposterously and feel that the poets mistics Eurypyle would have deserved it better. Her name has been told us by Meleiger, is already quoted and in mother epigrum by Antipater.

ι γρα δε δερκομειοισει εν ομικασει οι λον αειδοις, αιθι ττωι λιπαρης ανθος επιρθε κομης, ηε προς Ειριπεληι -ετραμμείος . . .

Long may the nymph around thee play, Europyle, thy soul's desire, Basking her beauties in the ray That lights thine eves' dissolving fire!

Sing of her smil's bewitching power, Her every grace that warms and blesses, Sing of her brows luxuriant flower, The beaming glory of her tresses.

Epigrams

Farewell! thou had'st a pulse for every dark
That mighty Love could scatter from his quiver;

And each new beauty found in thee a heart,
Which thou, with all thy heart and soul,
didst give her!

The expression her ανθος κομής, the flower of the hair, 'is borrowed from Anaccon himself, sappears by a frigment of the poet preserved in Stobius Απεκείμας δ απαλής αμέρι απθής

The first note for sumbor, etc.] Thus says Brunck, in the prologue to the Sin of Prisus—

Cantue credis Pegiseium nectu

"Melos is the usual reading in this line and Casaubon has defended it but nectual is I think, much more spirited

I το τε ll film hi t i l fr i j list etc l εφις σκοπος ε copu err nature not pecu lator is Barne very tilsely interpret it

Vincentius Ob opous upon this pissage, contrives to induly caus with a little istrological wisdom, and talks in a style of harned sendal about Venus, "male posita cum Marte in domo Saturni"

And a.h no c b suty funt forth a h set, etc.]

This couplet is not otherwise warranted by the original, than as /it dilates the thought which Antipater has figuratively expressed.

Epigrams

Critias, of Athers, pays a tribute to the legitimate gallantry of Anacreon, calling him, with elegant conciscness, γυναικων ηπεροπευμα.

Τον δε γινακειων μελεων πλεξαντα ποτ' ωδας, 'Ηδιν Ανακρειοντα, 'Τιως εις 'Ελλαδ' ανηγεν, Σιμποσιων ερεθισμα, γιναικων ηπεροπευια.

I'cos gave to Greco her treasure, Sage Anacreon, sage in loving; Fondly weaving lays of pleasure For the maids who blush'd approving

When in nightly banquets sporting,
Where's the guest could ever fly him?
When with love's seduction courting,
Where's the nymph could e'er deny him?

1 Thus Scaliger, in his dedictiony verses to Ronsard— Blandus, surviloguus, dulcis Antercon.

NOTES

ODE 1

This ode is the first of the series in the Vatican manuscript, which attributes it to no other poet than Anacreon. They who assert that the manuscript imputes it to Basilius have been misled by the words Tor aurou partitions in the margin, which are merely intended as a title to the following ode. Whether it be the production of Anacreon or not, it has all the leatures of ancient simplicity, and is a beautiful imitation of the poet's happiest manner.

Sparkled in his egs of fire.

Through the mix of coft d ore.] "How could be know at the first look (says Baxter, that the poet was φιλευνος?" There are surely many tell-tales of this propensity; and the following are the indices, which the physiognomist gives, describing a disposition perhaps not unlike that of Anacreon: Οφθαλμοι κλυζομένοι, κυσείνοιτες εν αύτοις, εις αφροδίσια και ευπαθείαν επτοηνταί, ουτε δε αδίκοι, ουτε κακουργοί, ουτε φυσεως φαιλης, ουτε αμουσοί (Adamantius). "The eyes that are humid and fluctuating show a proposity to pleasure and love; they bespeak too a mind of integrity and beneficance, a generosity of disposition, and a genius for poetry

Baptista Porta tells us some strange opinions of the ancient physiognomists on this subject, their reasons for which were curious, and perhaps not altogether functial (side Physiog. nom. Johan. Baptist Perte)

I to l the core the color is me to term

Br it i tef him etc.] Philostratus has the same thought in one of his Ιρρατικά where he speaks of the guland which he had sent to his mistress. Et δε βοιλεί τι φίλω χαριζετθαί, τα λείψανα αιτιπερίψον, μηκετί πνέοντα γοδών μόνου αλλά και σοι "If thou ait inclined to gratify thy lover, send him bick the remains of the gailand, no longer breathing of roses only but of thee!" Which pietty concrit is borrowed as the author of the θε τη remaiks) in a well-known little song of Ben Jonson's

But thou thereon didst only liet he,
 And sent it liek to me
 Since when it looks and smells I swear,
 Not of itself, but thee!

Aft of If the exercice 1 This idea, as Longepietre remarks occurs in in epigrum of the seventh book of the Anthologia

Εξοτε κωι πινοι - αινεστασισα Χαρικλω Λαθρη τοις ιδιό , αμφιβαλε στεικανοις, Πιρ ολουν δαπτει με

While I unconscious qualfil my wine.
Twas then thy fingers sayly stole
Upon my brow that wreath of thine,
Which since his midden'd ill my soul

ODE, II

Produm the large f f thent. The ancients prescribed certain laws of drinking at their festivals, for an account of which see the commentators. Angeicon here we the sympositich, or master of the festival. This etrinslated according to those who consider f πελλα θεσμών as in anyelsion of θεσμών κιπέλλων.

ODE III

La Fosse has thought proper to lengthen this poem by considerable interpolitions of his own which he thinks are indispensibly necessity to the completion of the description.

ODE IV

This ode Nulus Gellius tell us we performed at an entertinment where he we present

While many in the 11 is hold to 2000 a line of the identional line given in the Vatican manuscript, which have not been accurately inserted in any of the ordinary editions.

Ποιησον αμπελοξε μοι Και βοτριας καθ αιτών Και μαινάδας τοι γωσας. Ποιει δε ληνονοινοι,

Αηνοβατας πατοιντας,
Τους σατιρους γελωντας,
Και χρισους σοιις ερωτας,
Και Κυθερην γελωσαν,
'Ομου καλω Αιαιω,
Ερωτα κ' 'Αφροδιτην.

ODE V

Degen thinks that this ode if a more modern imitation of the preceding. There is a poem by Cælius Calcagninus, in the manner of both, where he gives instructions about the making of a ring.

Tornabis annulum mihi Et labre, et apte, et commode, etc. etc.

Let Love be there, without his arms, etc.] Thus Sannazaro in the ectoque of Gallian nell Aradia-

Vegnan li vaghi Amori Senza fiammelle, o strali, Scherzando insieme pargoletti e nudi.

Fluttering on the busy wing,
A train of naked Cupids came.
Sporting around in harmless ring,
Without a dart, without a flame.

And thus in the Pervisilium Veneris—

Ite nymphæ, posu t arma, feriatus est amor.

Love disarm'd—ye nymphs, in stfety stray,
Your bosom, now may boast a holiday!

But ah! if there Apollo toys,

I tremble for the rosy boys, An allusion to the fable that Apollo had, killed his beloved boy Hyacinth, while playing with him at quoits. "This (says M. La Fosse: it assuredly the sense of the text, and it cannot admit of any other.",

The Italian translators, to save themselves the trouble of a note, have taken the liberty of making Anacreon himself explain this fable. Thus Salvini, the most literal of any of them

Ma con lor non giuochi Apollo; Che in fiero risco Col duro disco A Giacinto fiaccò il collo.

ODE VI

This beautiful fiction, which the commentators have attributed to Julian, a royal poet, the Vatican MS, pronounces to be the genuine offspring of Anagreon. It has, indeed, all the features of the parent—et facile insciis Noscitetur ab omnibus,

Where many an early rose was weeping.

I found the urchin Capid deeping. This idea is prettily imitated in the following epigram by Andreas Naugerius...

Plorentes dum forte vagans mea Hyella per hortos Texit odoratis lilia cana cosis.

Ecce rosas inter latitantem invenit Amorem
Et simul annexis floribus implicuit
Luctatui primo, et contra sistentibus alis
Indomitus tentat solveie vinela puei
Mox ubi lacteolis et dignis matie pipillas
Vidit et ori ipsos nata movere Deos,
Impositosque coma ambrosios ut sentir odores
Quosque legit diti messe beatus Aribs
"I(dixit mei, queie novum tibi matei, Amorem,
Imperio sedes hae erit ipti mee

As fin Hyella, through the bloomy grove,
A wreath of many mingled flow rets wove,
Within a rose a sleeping Love she found,
And in the twisted wreaths the baby bound
Awhile he struggled and impatient tried
To bir ik the rosy bonds the virgin fied
But when he saw har bosom's radiant swell,
Her feitures where the eye of Jove might dwell,
And eight the imbrosial abouts of her han Rich is the Freithings of Aribian in
"Oh" mother Venus—said the riptur dehild,
By chaims of more than mortal bloom begul ds,)
Cooseek mother by thou t lost thing own,
Hyella's aims shall now be Cupid's throne!"

This epigrim of Ningerius is imitated by Lodovico Dolee in a poem beginning-

Mentre raccogle hor uno, hor altro fiore Vicini i un rio di chiate et lucid sonde Lidia, etc. etc.

ODE VII

Alberts has smitated this ode in a poem

Nisa mi dice e Clori Firsi, tu se pur veglio

Whether of cline has the I my han
I maure I with r land record of Henry Stephen very justly remarks the elegant negligence of expression in the original here

Lyw δι τας κ ιας μεν Ι ιτ ειτιν ειτ απηλθυι Οι κοιδα

And Longapiere has adduced from Catallus what he thinks a similar instance of this simplicity of manner —

Ipse quis sit a rum sit in fion sit id quoque nescit

I ongepieue was a good critic but perhips the line which he has selected is a specimen of a cric lessness not very commendable. At the same time I confess that none of the I itin poets have ever appeared to me so capable of imitating the graces of Anaereon as Citullus if he had not illowed a depraved imagination to nurry him so often into mere vulgar licentiousness.

That still 4s death app? they'n tres,
The joys of life are sweeter, den r] Pontanus as a very delicate thought upon the subject of old age ---

Quid rides, Mationa? senem quid temnis amantem?

Quisquis amat nulla est conditione senex.

Why do you scorn my want of youth, And with a smile my brow behold? Lady dear! believe this truth, That he who loves cannot be old.

ODE VIII

"The German poet Lessing has imitated this ode, vol. i. p. 24" (Degen; Gail, De Editionibus).

Baxter conjectures that this was written upon the occasion of our poet's returning the money to Polycrates, according to the anecdote in Stobæus.

I care not for the ide state

Of Persia's king, etc.] "There is a fragment of Archilochus in Plutarch, De tranquillitate animi, which our poet has very closely imitated here; it begins—

' Ου μοι τα Γυγεω του πολυχρισου μελει" (Barnes), In one of the monkish imitators of Anacreon we find the same thought—

> Ψυχην εμην ερωτω, Τι σοι βελεις γενεσθαι; Θελεις Γυγεω τα και τα.

Be mine the rich perfumes that flow,

To cool and scent my locks of snow.] In the original, μυρσισι καταβρεχειν ύπηνην. On account of this idea of perfuming the beard, Cornelius de Pauw pronounces the whole ode to be the spurious production of some lascivious monk, who was nursing his beard with unguents. But he should have known that this was an ancient Eastern custom, which, if we may believe Savary, still exists: "Vous voyez, monsieut (says this traveller), que l'usage antique de se parfumer la tête et la baibe, l'eélébré par le prophete Roi, subsiste encore de mos jours" (lettre 12). Savary likewise cites this very ode of Anacreon. Angerianus has not thought the idea inconsistent, having introduced it in the following lines.

206

Hæc mihi cura, rosis et cingere tempora myrto, Et curas multo delapidare mero.

Hæc mihi cura, comas et barbam tingere succo

This be my care, to wreathe my brow with flowers, To drench my sorrows in the ample bowl;

To pour rich perfumes o'er my beard in showers, And give full loose to mirth and joy of soul!

ODE IX

The poet is here in a frenzy of enjoyment, and it is indeed "amabilis insania".

Futor di poesia, Di lascivia, e di vino,

1 "Sicut unquentum in capite quod descendit in barbam Aaroms Pseaume 133."

Triplicato furore,

Bacco, Apollo, et Amore

(Riti giti del Cavolici Mirino).

This is truly, as Scaliger expresses it-

. . . Insaniic dulce Et sapidum furcic furorem

ODL X

This ode is addressed to a swallow. I find from Degen and from Gail's index that the German poet Weisse has imitated it, Scheiz Lieder libit carm 5, that Ramber also has imitated it, Lyr Blumenlese, lib. iv p 335, and some others (see Gail, De Flitenibus)

We are here referred by Degen to that dull book, The Fputles of Allaphoon, tenth epistle, third book, where lophon complains to Eraston of being wakened by the crowing of a cock from his vision of tiches

Silly reillore, priting thing, etc.] the loquacity of the swallow was proverbialised, thus Mico-Stratus—

Ει το σιτεχως και πολλα και ταχιως λαλειν « Ην του φρονειν παρασημον, αί χελιδονες Ελεγοντ' αν ημων σωφρονεστεραι πολυ.

If in prating from morning till night
A sign of our wisdom there be,
The swallows are wifer by right,
For they prattle much faster than we.

Or, as Tereus did, of old, etc.] Modern poetry has confirmed the name of Philomel upon the nightingale; but many, respectable authorities among the ancients assigned this metamorphose to Progne, and made Philomel the swallow, as Anacreon does here.

ODE XI

It is difficult to preserve with any grace the narrative simplicity of this ode, and the humour of the turn with which it concludes. I feel, indeed, that the translation must appear vapid, if not ludicious, to an English reader

And I can no longer keep

Little gods, who muchs dep'] I have not literally rendered the epithet παντορικτα, if it has any meaning here, it is one, perhaps, better omitted.

I must burn with warm desire.

Or thou, my boy - in yonder fire.] From this Longepierre conjectures that, whatever Anacreon might say, he lelt sometimes the inconvenience of old age, and here solicits from the power of Love a warmth which he could no longer expect from Nature.

ODE XII

They tell how Atys, wild with lave,

Roams the mount and hadated grove;] There are many ontradictory stories of the loves of Cybele and Atys. It is certain that he was mutilated, but whether by his own fury or Cybele's jealousy, is a point upon which authors are not agreed.

Gybel's name he hards around, etc.] I have here adopted the accentuation which Eliis Andreas gives to Cybele—

In montibus Cybelen Magno onans boatu

Oft too, by Cliros hallow'l foring, etc.] This fountain was in a grove, consecrated to Apollo, and situated between Colophon and Lebedos, in Ionia. The god had an oracle there, Scaliger thus alludes to it in his Trucemin i—

Semel ut concitus æstro, Veluti qui Clarias aquas Ebibere loquiees, Quo plus canunt, plura volunt.

While floating chours, etc.] Spaletti has quite mistaken the import of κορεσθεις as applied to, the poet's misticss--- Met fatigatus amicâ; "—thus interpreting it in a sense which must want either delicacy or gill intry, if not, perhaps, both.

ODE XIII

And what did I inthinking di?

I took to cans, undaunted, too;] I ongepierre has here quoted an epigram from the Anthologia, in which the poet assumes Reason as the armour against Love.

Ωπλισμαι προς ερωτα περι σπερνοισι λογισμον.

Ουδε με νικησει, μονος των προς ένα:

Θνατος δ' αθανατω συνελεισομαι: ην δε βοηθον

Βακχον εχη, τι μονος προς δυ' εχω δυναμαι:

With Reason I cover my breast as a shield, And fearlessly meet little Love in the field: Thus fighting his godship, I'll ne'er be dismay'd: But if Bacchus should ever advance to his aid, Alas! then, unable to combat the two.

Unfortunate warrior, what should I do?

This idea of the irresistibility of Cupid and Bacchus united is delicately expressed in an Italian poem, which is so truly Anacrontic that its introduction here may be pardoned. It is an imitation, indeed, of our poet's $1xth ode.

Lavossi Amore in quel vicino hume Ove giuro (Pastor), the bevend' to Bever le fiamme, anzi l'istesso Dio, Ch'or con l'humide piume Lascivetto mi scherza al cor intorno. Ma che sarei s'io lo bevessi un giorno. Bacco, nel tuo liquore? Sarei, piu che non sono ebro d'Amore The urchin of the bow and quiver Was bathing in a neighbohring river, Where, as I drank on yester-eve, (thepherd-youth, the tale believe,)

"Twas not a cooling, crystal draught,
"Iwas liquid flame I madly quaff'd;
For Love was in the rippling tide,
I felt him to my bosom glide;
And now the wily, wanton minion
Plays found my heart with restless pinion."
A day it was of fatal star,
But ah, 'twere even more fatal far,
If, Bacchus, in thy cup of fire.
I tound this flutt'ring, young desire:
Then, then indeed my soul would prove,
Ev'n more than ever, drunk with love!

And, having nove no other dart, He shot himself into my heart!] Dryden has parodied this thought in the following extravagant lines.—

Nay, I am Love, Love shot, and shot so fast, He shot himself into my breast at last.

ODE XIV

The poet in this catalogue of his mistresses means nothing more than, by a lively hyperbole, to inform us that his heart, unfettered by any one object, was warm with devotion towards the sex in general. Cowley is indebted to this ode for the him of his ballad, called The Chronicle; and the learned Menage has imitated it in a Greek

· Notes

Anacreontic, which has so much ease and spirit that the reader may not be displeased at seeing it here---

HPOY BIRNA.

Ει αλσεων τα φυλλα, Λειμωνιους τι ποιας, Ес ректоз адтра парта. Παρακτιούς τε ψαμμούς, Άλως τε κυματωδη. Δυνη, Βιων, αριθμείν, Και τους εμους ερωτας Aun, Blor, applicer. Κορην, γυναικα, Χηραν, Σμικρην, Μεσην, Μεγιστην, Λευκην τε και Μελαιναν, Ορειαδας Ναπαιας Νηρηϊδας τε πασας 'Ο σος φιλος φιλησε. Ι[αντων κορος μεν εστιν. Αυτην νεων Ερωτων, Δεσποιναν Αφροδιτην, Χρυσην, καλην, γλυκειαν, Ερασμίαν, ποθείνην, Αει μονην φιλησαι Εγωγε μη δοναιμην.

Tell the foliage of the woods, Tell the billows of the floods, Number midnight's starry store, And the sands that crowd the shore,

I'icn, my Bion, thou mayst count Of my loves the vist amount Ive been loving, all my days, Many nymphs in miny ways, Virgin widow maid and wife Lve been doting all my life Nords Neiglds nymplis of fountains Goddes es of groves and mountains Lucind sible creat in Limitle Yes I swen I ve loved them all! Soon was every passion over I was but the moment's lover. Oh! Im such croving elf That the Queen of I ove herself Though she practised all her wiles. Rosy blushes wie thed smiles, All her beauty's proud endeavour Could not chain my heart for ever

Citmoth 1 11

Fig. left etc.] This figure is called by the toricians the Impossible (adirator and is very frequently made use of in poetry. The imatory writers have exhausted a world of imagery by it to express the infinite number of kisses which they require from the lips of their mistresses, in the Civillus led the way.

- Quam sider i multa, cum ta et nox, Futtivos hominum vident amores,

Tam te basia multa basiare Vesano satis, et super. Catullo est Qua nec pernumetare diriosi Possint nec mili fascinare lingua

(cum 7)

As many stellar eyes of light,
As through the silent waste of night,
Gazing upon this world of shade,
Witness some secret youth and maid.
Who fair is thou and fond is I,
In stolen joys enamour data
So many kisses ere I slumber,
Upon those dew bright lips I II number
So many kisses we shall count,
Envy can never tell the amount
No tongue shall blat the sum but mine
No lips shall fascinate but thine?

In the fund Contituen (ver,

Where ich count is rem more, etc.] Corinth was very femous for the beauty and number of its countezins. Venu was the deity principally worshipped by the people, and their constant prayer was that the gods should increase the number of her worshippers. We may perceive from the application of the verb κορινθιαζείν in Aristophanes that the lubricity of the Corinthians had become proverbial.

"There, indexes, are nymphs divine, Dangerous to a soul like mine!] "With justice has the poet attributed beauty to the women of Greece "(Degen).

M. De Pauw, the author of Dissertations upon the Greeks, is of a different opinion: he thinks that, by a capricious partiality of nature, the other sex had all the beauty; and by this supposition endeavours to account for a very singular depravation of instinct among that people.

Gades' warm, desiring train;] a'The Gaditanian girls were like the Baladières of India, whose dances are thus described by a French author: "Les danses sont presque toutes des pantomimes d'amour; le plan, le dessein, les attitudes, les mesures, les sons et les cadences de ces ballets, tout respire cette passion et en exprime les voluptés et les fureurs" (Raynal, Histoire du Commerce des Europ. dans les deux Indes).

The music of the Gaditanian females had all the voluptuous character of their dancing, as appears from Martial—

Cantica qui Nili, qui Gaditana susurrat (lib, iii, epig. 63).

Ludovic Ariosto had this ode of our bard in his mind when he wrote his poem "De diversis amoribus" (see the Anthologia Italorum).

ODE 'XV

The dove of Anacteon, bearing a letter from 216

the poet to his mistress, is met by a stranger, with whom this dialogue is imagined.

The ancients made use of letter-carrying pigeons when they went any distance from home, as the most certain means of conveying intelligence back. That tender domestic attachment which attracts this delicate little bird through every danger and difficulty, till it settles in its native nest, affords to the author of The Pleasures of Monory a fine and interesting exemplification of his subject.

Led by what chart, transports the timid dove

The wreaths of conquest, or the vows of love? (see the poem). Daniel Heinsius in speaking of Dousa, who adopted this method at the siege of Leyden, expresses a similar sentiment...

Quo patriæ non tendit amor : Mandata referre Postquam hommem nequiit mittere, misit avem.

Fuller tells us that at the siege of Jerusalem the Christians intercepted a letter tied to the legs of a dove, in which the Persian emperor promised assistance to the besieged (Holy War, cap. 24, book i.).

She, whose eye has madden'd many, etc.] For τυραννον in the original, Zeune and Schneider conjecture that we should read τυραννου, in allusion to the strong influence which this object of his love held over the mind of Polycrates (see Degen).

Venus, for a hymn of love,

Warbled in her votive grove, etc.] "This passage is invaluable, and I do not think that anything so beautiful or so delicate has ever been said. What an idea does it give of the poetry of the man, from whom Venus herself, the mother of the Graces and the Pleasures, purchases a little hymn with one of her favourite doves!" (Longepierre).

De Pauw objects to the authenticity of this ode, because it makes Anacreon his own panegyrist; but poets have a licence for praising themselves, which, with some indeed, may be considered as comprised under their general privilege of fiction.

ODE XVI

This ode and the fext may be called companionpictures; they are highly finished, and give us an excellent idea of the taste of the ancients in beauty. Franciscus Junius quotes them in his third book De Pictura Veterum.

This ode has been imitated by Ronsard, Giuliano Goselini, etc. etc. Scaliger alludes to it thus in his Anacreonica—

Olim lepore blando Litis versibus Candidus Anacreon Quam pingeret amicus Descripsit Venerem suam.

The Teian bard, of former days, Attun'd his sweet descriptive lays, And taught the painter's hand to trace His fair beloved's ev'ry grace.

In the dialogue of Caspar Barlaus, entitled An formous sit aducents, the reader will find many curious ideas and descriptions of womanly beauty,

Thou, whose soft and rosy have

Mimi. from Bed soul infus...] I have followed here the reading of the Vatican MS. ροδεης. Painting is called the rosy art," either in reference to colouring or as an indefinite epithet of excellence, from the association of beauty with that flower. Salvini has adopted this reading in his literal translation

Della rosca arre signore,

Th. lovely main that's far arway.] If this portrait of the poet's mistress be not merely ideal, the omission of her name is much to be regretted. Meleager, in an epigram on Anacreon, mentions "the golden Eurypyle" as his mistress...

Βεβληκως χρυσεην χειρας επ' Ευρυπυλην.

Paint her jetty ringlets playing,

Silky lacks, like tendrils straying;] The ancients have been very enthusiastic in their praises of the beauty of hair. Apuleius, in the second book of his Milesiaes, says that Venus herself, if she were baid, though surrounded by the Graces and the

Loves, could not be pleasing even to her husband Vulcan

Stesichorus gave the epithet καλλιπλοκαμος to the Graces, and Simonides bestowed the same upon the Muses (see Hadrian Junius's Discritation upon Hair.

To this passage of our poet, Selden alluded in a note on the Polyolbion of Drayton, Song the Second, where, observing that the epithet black-haired was given by some of the ancients to the goddess Isis, he says, Nor will I swear, but that Anacreon (a man very judicious in the provoking motives of wanton love), intending to bestow on his sweet mistress that one of the titles of woman's special ornament, well - haired (καλλιπλοκαμος), thought of this when he gave his painter direction to make her black-haired."

And, if painting hath the skill

To make the spicy balm distil, etc.] Thus Philostratus, speaking of a picture: επαίνω και ·τον ενδροσον των ροδων, και φημι γεγραφθαι αυτα μετα της οσμης. "I admire the dewiness of these roses, and could say that their very smell was painted."

Mix'd with the liquid light that lies

In Cytherea's languid eyes.] Marchetti explains thus the ὑγρον of the original—

Dipingili umidetti Tremuli e lascivetti, Quai gli ha Ciprigna l'alma Dea d'Amore.

Tasso has painted in the same manner the eyes of Armida-

Qual raggio in onda le scintilla un tiso Negli umidi occhi tremulo e lascivo.

Within her humid, melting eyes A brilliant ray of laughter lie, Soft as the broken solar beam.
That trembles in the agure stream.

The mingled expression of dignity and tenderness which Anacreon requires the painter to infuse into the eyes of his mistress, is more amply described in the subsequent ode. Both descriptions are so exquisitely touched, that the artist must have been great indeed if he did not yield in painting to the poet.

Mingling tints, as when there glows
In snowy milk the bashful rose.] Thus Propertius (eleg. 3, lib. ii.)—

. Utque rosæ puro lacte natant folia.

And Davenant in a little poem, called The Catch as it falls the Scythian snow, Bring blushing roses steep'd in milk.

Thus too Taygetus-

Quæ lac atque rosas vincis candore rubenti.

These last words enay perhaps defend the "Lushing white" of the translation.

Then her lip, so rich in blisses,

Sweet petitioner for kisses.] The "lip, provoking kisses," in the original is a strong and beautiful Achilles Tatius speaks of xeiln expression. μαλθακα προς τα Φιληματα. "Lips soft and delicate for kissing." A grave old commentator, Dionysins Lambinus, in his notes upon Lucretius, tells us with the apparent authority of experience that "Suavius viros osculantur puellæ labiosæ, quam quæ sunt brevibus labris." And Æneas Sylvius, in his tedious uninteresting story of the loves of Euryalus and Lucretia, where he particularises the beauties of the heroine (in a very false and laboured style of latinity), describes her lips thus: .. Os parvum decensque, labia corallini coloris ad morsum aptissima" (epist. 114, lib. i.),

Next, beneath the velvet chin.

Whose dimple hides'a Love within, etc.] Madame Dacier has quoted here two pretty lines of Varro—

Sigilla in mento impressa Amoris digitulo Vestigio demonstrant mollitudinem.

In her chin is a delicate dimple.

By Cupid's own finger imprest;

There Beauty, bewitchingly simple,

Has chosen her innocent nest.

Now let a floating, lucid weil,

Shadow her form, but not cono al, etc.] This delicate art of description, which leaves imagination to complete the picture, has been seldom adopted in the imitations of this beautiful poem. Ronsaid is exceptionally minute, and Politianus, in his charming portrait of a glil, full of ticle and exquisite diction, has lifted the veil rather too much. The equesto the tu m' intendi ' should be always left to fancy.

ODE AVII

The reader who wishes to acquire an accurate idea of the judgment of the ancients in beauty, will be indulged by consulting Junius s. Di. Putura Veterion, Ith. 3. cap. 9, where I c will find a very curious selection of descriptions and epithets of personal perfections. Junius compares this ode with a description of Theodoric, king of the Goths, in the second epistle, first book, of Sidonius Apollinaris

Let his hair, in ma ses bright.

Fall like floating ray of light, etc.] He here describes the sunny hair, the office coma, which the ancients so much admited. The Romans gave this colour artificially to their him (see Stanish Kobienzyck, d. Lux eR non rum).

Let no receath, reith artful traine, etc.] If the original here, which is particularly beautiful, can admit of any additional value, that value is consterred by Gray's admitation of it (see his letters to West).

Some annotators have quoted on this passage the description of Photis's hair in Apuleius; but nothing can be more distant from the simplicity of our poet's manner than that affectation of richness which distinguishes the style of Apuleius.

But flush'd with manhood's early glove,

And guildess as the dervs of daron, etc.] Torrentius, upon the words "insignem tenui fronte," in Horace, od. 33, lib. i., is of opinion, incorrectly I think, that "tenui" here bears the same meaning as the word απαλον.

Mix in his eyes the power alike,

With love to voin, with awe to strike, etc.] Tasso gives a similar character to the eyes of Clorinda—

Lampeggiar gli occhi, e folgorar gli sguardi Dolci ne l'ira,

Her eyes were flashing with a heavenly heat, A fire that, even in anger, still was sweet.

The poetess Veronica Cambara is more diffuse upon this variety of expression—

Occhi lucenti e belli, Come esser puo ch' in un medesmo istante Nascan de voi si nuove forme et tante? Lieti, mesti, superbi, humil', altieri, Vi mostrate in un punto, onde di speme,

Oh! tell me, brightly teaming eye, Whence in your little orbit lie

Et di timor, de empiete, etc. etc.

So many different traits of fire, Expressing each a new desire. Now with pride or scorn you darkle, Now with love, with gladness, sparkle, While we who view the varying mirror, Feel by turns both hope and terfor.

Chevreau, citing the lines of our poet in his critique on the poems of Malherbe, produces a Latin version of them from a manuscript which he had seen, entitled "Joan, Falconis Anacreontici Lusus."

That Eloquence revoild claim her oven; In the original, as in the preceding ode, Pitho, the goddess of persuasion, or eloquence. It was worthy of the delicate imagination of the Greeks to deify Persuasion, and give her the lips for her throne. We are here reminded of a very interesting fragment of Anacteon, preserved by the scholiast upon Pindar, and supposed to belong to a poem reflecting with some severity on Simonides, who was the first, we are told, that ever made a hireling of his muse...

Ουδ' αργυρεη ποτ' ελαμψε Πειθω. Nor yet had fair Persuasion shone In silver splendours, not her own.

And let the lips, though silent, wear

A life-look, as if words were there.] In the original, λαλων σισπη. The mistress of Petrarch is parla con silenzio," which is perhaps the best method of female eloquence.

No es

Give him the winged Hermes' hand, etc.] In Shakspeare's "Cymbeline" there is a similar method of description—.

... this is his hand, His foot mercurial, his martial thigh, The brawns of Hercules.

We find it likewise in "Hamlet." Longepierre thinks that the hands of Mercury are selected by Anacron on account of the graceful gestures which were supposed to characterise the god of eloquence; but Mercury was also the patron of thickes, and may perhaps be praised as a light-fingered deity.

. . . But hold-forbear-

I see the sun god's portrait there;] The abrupt turn here is spirited, but requires some explanation. While the artist is pursuing the portrait of Bathyllus, Anacicon, we must suppose, turns round and sees a picture of Apollo, which was intended for an altar at Samos. He then instantly tells the painter to cease his work; that this picture will serve for Bathyllus, and that, when he goes to Samos, he may make an Apollo of the portrait of the boy which he had begun.

"Bathyllus (says Madame Dacier) could not be more elegantly praised, and this one passage does him more honour than the statue, however beautiful it might be, which Polyciates raised to him."

ODE XVIII

An elegant translation of this ode, says Degen, may be found in Ramler's Lyr. Blumenlese, lib. v. p. 403.

Bring me wine in brimming uns, etc.] Orig. πιειν αμυστι. The amystis was a method of drinking used among the Thracians. Thus Horace, Threisia vineat amystide; Mad. Dacier, Longepierre, etc. etc.

Parrhasius in his twenty-sixth epistle (Theam., Critic, vol. i.) explains the amystis as a draught to be exhausted without drawing breath, "uno haustu." A note in the margin of this epistle of Parrhasius says, "Politianus vestem esse putabat," but adds no reference.

Give me all those humid flowers, etc.] According to the original reading of this sine, the poet says, "Give me the flower of wine"—Date flosculos Lyzi, as it is in the version of Elias Andreas; and as Regnier has it, who supports the reading. The word $A\nu\theta$ os would undoubtedly bear this application, which is somewhat similar to its import in the epigram of Simonides upon Sophocles—

Deh porgetimi del fiore Di quel almo e buon liquore,

. Εσβεσθης γεραιε Σφοκλεες, ανθος αοιδων, and for in the Latin is frequently applied in the same manner: thus Cethegus is called by Ennius, "Flos inlibatus populi, suadzeque medulla" (The immaculate flowers of the people, and the very marrow of persupsion) (see these verses cited by Aulus Gellius, lib. xii., which Cicero praised and Seneca thought ridiculous).

But in the passage before us, if we admit εκεινων, according to Faber's conjecture, the sense is sufficiently clear, without having recourse to such tefinements.

Every dercy rose I wear

Sheds its tears, and within them.] There are some beautiful lines, by Angerianus, upon a garland, which I cannot resist quoting here—

Ante fores madidæ sic sic pendete corollæ,
Mane orto imponet Cælia vos capiti;
At quum per niveam cervicem influxerit humor,
Dicite, non roris sed pluvia hæc lacrimæ.

By Celia's arbour all the night
Hang, humid wreath, the lover's vow⁶;
And haply, at the morning light,
My love shall twine thee round her brow.

Then, if upon her bosom bright
Some drops of dew shall fall from thee,
Tell her, they are not drops of night,
But tears of sorrow shed by me!

In the poem of Mr. Sheridan's, "Uncouth is this Moss-covered Grotto of Stone," there is an idea very singularly coincident with this of Angerianus—

And thou, stony grot, in thy arch may'st preserve Some lingering drops of the eight-fallen dew; Let them fall on her bosom of snow, and they'll serve

As tears of my sorrow entrusted to you,

But to you, my burning heart, etc. [1] The transition here is peculiarly delicate and impassioned; but • he commentators have perplexed the sentiment by a variety of readings and conjectures.

ODE XIX

The description of this bower is so natural and animated that we almost feel a degree of coolness and freshness while we peruse it. Longepierre has quoted from the first book of the Anthologia the following epigram as somewhat resembling this ode—

Ερχεο και κατ' εμαν ίζευ πιτυν, ά το μελιχρον Προς μαλακους ηχει κεκλιμενα ζεφυρους. Ηνιδε και κρουνισμα μελισταγες, ενθα μελισδωθ 'Πδυν ερημαιοις ύπνον αγω καλαμοις.

Come, sit by the shadowy pine That covers my sylvan retreat; And see how the Branches incline The breathing of zephyr to meet.

See the fountain, that, flowing, diffuses
Around me a glittering spray;

" By its brink, as the traveller muses, I soothe h≱n to sleep with my lay.

Here, his you, gentle maid, etc.] The Vatican MS, reads $\beta \alpha \theta \nu \lambda \delta \nu$, which renders the whole poem metaphorical. Some commentator suggests the reading of $\beta \alpha \theta \nu \lambda \lambda \nu$, which makes a pun upon the name; a grace that Plato himself has condescended to in writing of his boy $\lambda \sigma \tau \eta \rho$ (see the epigram of this philosopher, which I quote on the twenty-second ode).

There is another epigram by this philosopher, preserved in Lacritius, which turns upon the same word.

Λστηρ πριν μεν ελαμπες ενι ζωοισιν έωσς.

Νιν δε θανων λαμπεις έσπερος εν φθιμενοις.

In life thou west my morning star,

But now that death has stol'n thy light,

Like the pale beam that weeps at night,

In the Vinites Blyenhargher, under the head of "Allusiones," we find a number of such frigid conceits upon names, selected from the poets of the Middle Ages.

Who, my girl, would pass it by?

Surely nutter you nor I.] The finish given to the picture by this simple exclamation τις αν ουν όρων παρελθοι is inimitable. Yet a French translator says on the passage, "This conclusion appeared to me too trifling after such a description, and I thought proper to add somewhat to the strength of the original."

ODE XX

The poet appears, in this graceful allegory, to describe the softening influence which poetry holds over the mind in making it peculially susceptible, to the impressions of bouty. In the following epigram, however, by the philosopher Plato (Diog. Laert. lib. 3), the Muses are represented as disavowing the influence of Love.

- 'Α Κυπρις Μουσαισι, κορασια, ταν Αφροδιταν Τιματ', η τον Πρωτα ί αιαν εφοπλισοιιαι.
- Αί Μοισαι ποτι Κυπριν, Αρει τα στωμι λα ταιτα' 'Πμιν ου πεταται τοιτο το παιδαριον.
- "Yield to my gentle power, Parmissian maids"; Thus to the Muses spoke the Queen of Chaims-
- "Or Bove shall flutter through your classic shades, And make your grove the camp of Paphian arms!"
- "No," said the virgins of the tuncful bower, .
 "We scorn thine own and all thy utchin's art;
- Though Mars has trembled at the infant's power,
 His shaft is pointless o'er a Muse's heart!"

There is a sonnet by Beneddo Guidi, the thought bf which was suggested by this ode.

Scherzava dentro all' auree chiome Amore Dell' alma donna della vita mia: E tanta era il piacer ch' ei ne sentia. Che non sapea, hè volea uscirne fore.

Quando ecco ivi annodar si sente il core, «Sì, che ger forza ancor convien che stia: Tai lacci alta beltate orditi avia Del crespo crin, per farsi eterno onore,

Onde offre infin dal ciel degna mercede,
A cla scioglic il figliuol la bella dea
Da tanti nodi, in ch' ella stretto il vede.
Ma ei vinto a due occhi l' arme cede:
Et t' affatichi indarno, Citerea;
Che s' altri 'l scioglie, egli a legar si riede.

Love, wandering through the golden maze Of my beloved's hair, Found, at each step, such sweet delays, That rapt he linger'd there.

And how, indeed, was Love to fly.,
Or how his freedom find,
When every ringlet was a tie,
A chain, by Beauty twin'd?

In vain to seek her boy's release,
Comes Venus from above:
Fond mother, let thy efforts cease,
Love's now the slave of Love.
And, should we loose his golden chain,
The prisoner would return again!

His mother comes, with many a toy,

To ransom her beloved boy, etc.] In the first idyl of Moschus, Venus thus proclaims the reward for her fugitive child...

'() μανυτας γερας έξει, Μισθος τοι, το φιλαμα το Κυπριδος ην δ', αγαρης

Ου γυμνον το φιλαμα, τυ δ', ω είνε, και πλίον έξεις.

On him who the haunts of my Cupid can show, A kiss of the tenderest stamp I'll bestow; But he who can bring back the urchin in chains, Shall receive even something more sweet for his pains.

Subjoined to this ode we find in the Varican MS, the following lines, which appear to me to boast as little sense as metre, and which are most probably the interpolation of the transcriber...

Πδυμε της Ανακριών Ηδυμετης δε Σαπφω Ητινδαρικον το δε μοι μελος Συγκερασας τις εγχεοι Τα τρια ταυτα μοι δοκει Και Διονίσος εισελθών Και Παφιη παραχροός Και αυτός Ερώς καν επιείν.

ODE XXI

Those critics who have endeavoured to throw the chains of precision over the spirit of this beautiful trifle, require too much from Anacreontic philosophy. Among others, Gail very sapiently thinks that the poet uses the epithet $\mu\epsilon\lambda\alpha\nu\eta$, because black earth absorbs moisture more quickly than any other; and accordingly he indulges us with an experimental disquisition on the subject (see Gail's notes).

One of the Capilupi has imitated this ode in an epitaph on a drunkard-

Dum vixi sine fine bibi, sic imbrifer arcus Sic tellus pluvias sole perusta bibit. Sic bibit assiduè fontes et flumina Pontus, Sic semper sitiens Sol maris haurit aquas. Ne te igitur jactes plus me, Silene, bibisse; Et mihi da victas tu quoque, Bacche, manus. (Hippolytus Capilupus.)

While life was mine, the little hour
In drinking still unvaried flew;
I drank as earth imbibes the shower,
Or as the rainbow drinks the dew;
As ocean quaffs the rivers up,
Or flushing sun inhales the sea;
Silenus trembled at my cup,
And Bacchus was outdone by me!

I cannot omit citing those remarkable lines of Shakspeare, where the thoughts of the ode before us are preserved with such striking similitude—

I'll example you with thievery.
The sun's a thief, and with his great aftraction

Robs the vast sea. The moon's an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun. The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves. The mounds into salt tears. The earth's a thief. That feeds, and breeds by a composture stolin From general excrements.

(Toman of Ath m. act iv. se 3.)

ODE XXII

. . . A recepting mate m's ferm.] Niobe. — Ogilvie in his essay on the "Lyric Poetry of the Ancients," in remarking upon the Odes of Anacreon, says: "In some of his pieces there is exuberance and even wildness of imagination; in that particularly which is addressed to a young girl, where he wishes alternately to be transformed to a mirror, a coat, a stream, a bracelet, and a pair of shoes, for the different purposes which he recites: that is mere sport and wantonness."

It is the wantonness, however, of a very graceful Muse; "ludit amabiliter." The compliment of this ode is exquisitely delicate, and so singular for the period in which Anacreon lived, when the scale of love had not yet been graduated into all its little progressive refinements, that if we were inclined to question the authenticity of the poem, we should find a much more plausible argument in the features of modern gallantry v! ich it bears, than in any of those fastidious conjectures upon which some commentators have presumed so far. Degen thinks it spurious, and De Pauw pronounces it to be miserable. Longepierre and Barnes refer us to several imitations of this ode, from which I shall only select the following spigram of Dionysius...

Ειθ' ανεμος γενομην, συ δε γε στειχουσα παρ' αυγας, Στηθεα γυμνωσαις, και με πνεοντα λαβοις.

Ειθε ροδον γενομην υποπορφυρον, οφρα με χερσιν Αραμενη, κομισαις στεθεσι χιονεοις.

Είθε κρινών γενομήν λευκοχρούν, οφρά με χερσιν Αραμενή. μαλλον σης χρότιης κορέσης.

I wish I could like zephyr steal
To wanton o'er thy mazy vest;
And thou wouldst ope thy bosom-veil,
And take me panting to thy breast!

I wish I might a rose-bud grow,
And thou wouldst cull me from the bower.
To place me on that breast of snow,
Where I should bloom, a wintry flower.

I wish I were the lily's leaf,
To fade upon that bosom warm,
Content to wither, pale and brief,
The trophy of thy fairer form!

I may add that Plato has expressed as fanciful a wish in a distich preserved by Laertius-

Αστερας εισαθρεις, Αστηρ εμίος. ειθε γενοιμην Ουρανος, ώς πολλοις ομμασιν εις σε βλεπω.

To STELLA

Why dost thou gaze upon the sky?

Oh! that I were that spangled sphere,
And every star should be an eye,

To wonder on thy beauties here!

Apuleius quotes this epigram of the divine philosopher to justify himself for his verses on Critias and Charinus (see his Apology, where he also adduces the example of Anacreon: "Fecere tamen et alii talia, et si vos ignoratis, apud Gracos Teins quidam," etc. (tc.).

Or, better still, the zone, that lies

Close to thy breast, and feels its eight.] This rawing was a riband, or band, called by the Romans facia and strophium, which the women were for the purpose of restraining the exuberance of the bosom (vide Polluc. Onomast.). Thus Martial.—

Fascia rescentes dominæ compesce papillas.

The women of Greece not only wore this zone, but condemned themselves to fasting, and made use of certain drugs and powders for the same purpose. To these expedients they were compelled, in consequence of their inclegant fashion of compressing the waist into a very narrow compass, which necessarily caused an excessive, tumidity in the bosom (see Dioscorides, lib. v.).

Nay, sandals for those arry feet-

Ew'n to be trad by them nere trace! The sophist Philostratus, in one of his love-letters, has borrowed this thought: ω αδετοι πόδες, ω καλλος ελευθερος, ω τρισευδαιμων εγω λοι μακαριος εαν πατησετε με.— ·· Qh lovely feet! oh excellent beauty! oh! thrice happy and blessed should I be, if you would but tread on me! · In Shakspeare. Romeo desires to be a glove-

Oh! that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might kiss that cheek!

And, in his Passionate Pilgium, we meet with an idea somewhat like that of the thirteenth line-

He, spying her, bounc'd in, where as he stood, "O love! quoth she, "why was not I a flood?"

In Button's Anatomy of Melanchely, that whimsteal fattago of "all such reading as was never read," we find a translation of this ode made before 1632.—" Englished by Mg. B. Holiday in his Technog act i, sc. 7."

ODE XXIII

According to the order in which the odes are usually placed, this (Θελω λεγειν Ατρειδας) forms the first of the series; and is thought to be peculiarly designed as an introduction to the rest. It, however, characterises the genius of the Teian but very inadequately, as wine, the burden of his lays, is not even mentioned in it--

. . . cum multo Venerem confundere mero Precepit Lyrici Teia Musa senis (Ovid).

The twenty-sixth Ode, Συ μεν λεγεις τα θηβης, might, with just as much propriety, be placed at the head of his songs.

We find the sentiments of the ode before us expressed by Bion with much simplicity in his fourth idyl. The above translation is perhaps too paraphrastical; but the ode has been so frequently translated, that I could not otherwise avoid triteness and repetition.

In all the glow of epic fire,

To Hercules 1 wake the lyre! Madame Dacier generally translates $\lambda_{pp}$ into a lute, which I believe is inaccurate. "D'espliquer la lyre des anciens (says M. Sorel) par un luth, c'est ignorer la différence qu'il y a entre ces deux instrumens de musique" (Bibliothèque Françoise).

But still its fainting sighs repeat,

"The tale of love alone is raveet!"] The word αντεφωνει in the original may imply that kind of musical dialogue practised by the ancients, in which the lyre was made to respond to the questions proposed by the singer. This was a method which Sappho used, as we are told by Hermogenes; "όταν την Μέραν ερωτα Σαπφω, και όταν αυτη αποκβινηται" (Περι 1δεων, τομ. δευτ.).

ODE XXIV

Henry Stephen has imitated the idea of this ode in the following lines of one of his poems—

Provida dat cunctis Natura animantibus arma, Ét sua fœmineum possidet arma geilus, Ungulaque ut defendit equum, atque ut cornua taurum.

Armata est formà fœmina pulchra suá.

And the same thought occurs in those lines spoken by Corisca in Paster Fulu-

Cosi noi la bellezza Ch' è vertù nostra cosi propria, come La forza del leone, E l'ingegno de l' huomo.

The lion boasts his savage powers,
And lordly man his strength of mind;
But beauty's charm is solely ours,
Peculiar boon, by Heav'n assign'd.

"An elegant explication of the beauties of this ode (says Degen) may be found in Grimm's An den Anmerk über einige Oden des Anakr."

To man she gave in that proud hour,

The boon of intellectual power.] In my first attempt to translate this ode I had interpreted φρονημα, with Baxter and Barnes, as implying courage and military virtue; but I do not think that the gallantry of the idea suffers by the import which I have now given to it. For, why need we consider this possession of wisdom as exclusive? and in truth, as the design of Anacron is to estimate the treasure of beauty, above all the rest which Nature has distributed, it is perhaps egen refining upon the deficacy of the compliment, to prefer the radiance of female charms to the cold illumination of wisdom and prudence; and to think that women's eyes are

. . . . the books, the academies, From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire,

She gave thee beauty - mightier far

Than all the pomp and power of war.] Thus Achilles Tatius: καλλος οξυτερον τιτρωσκει βελους, και δια των οφθαλμων εις την ψυχην καταβρει. Οφθαλμος γαρ όδος ερωτικώ τραυματι. "Beauty wounds more swiftly than the arrow, and passes through the eye to the very soul; for the eye is the inlet to the wounds of love."

Be thou but fair, mankind adore thee,

Smile, and a world is weak b.fore thee! Longepierre's remark here is ingenious: "The Romans," says he, "were so convinced of the power of beauty that they used a word implying strength in the place of the epithet beautiful. Thus Plautus, act 2. sc. 2, Bacchid—

"Sed Bacchis etimm fortis tibi visa,
"Fortis, id eso formosa," say Servius and Nonius."

Q 241

ODE XXV

We have here another ode addressed to the swallow. Alberti has imitated both in one poem beginning—

Perch' io pianga al tuo canto, Rendinella importun, etc.

Alas! unlike the savarm of loves, That brood within this hapless breast,

And never, never change their next!] Thus Love is represented as a bird, in an epigram cited by Longepierre from the Anthologia—

Αιει μοι δυνει μεν εν ουασιν ηχος ερωτος, Ομμα δε σιγα ποθοις το γλυκυ δακρυ φερει. Ουδ' ή νυξ, ου φεγγος εκοιμισεν, αλλ' ύπο φιλτρων 11δε που κραδιη γνωστος ενεστι τυπος.

Ω πτανοι, μη και ποτ' εφιπτασθαι μεν ερωτες ()ιδατ', αποπτηναι δ' ουθ' όσον ισχυετε.

"I'is Love that murmurs in my breast, And makes me shed the secret tear; Nor day nor night my soul hath r.st, For night and day his voice I hear,

A wound within my heart I find,
And oh! 'tis plain where Love has been;
For still he leaves a wound behind,
Such as within my heart is seen.

Oh. bird of Love! with song so dear,
Make not my soul the nest of pain;
But let the wing which brought thee here,
In pity waft thee hence again!

ODE XXVI

"The German poet Uz has imitated this ode; compare also Weisse, Schrez. Lieder, lib. iii., der Soldat"; Gail, Degen.

No-'trwas from eyes of liquid blue

A host of quiver'd Cupuls flex: | Longepierre has quoted part of an epigram from the seventh book of the Anthologia, which has a fancy something olike this.

Ου με λεληθας,

Τοξοτα, Ζηνοφιλας ομμασι κρυπτομένος.

Archer Love! though slily creeping, Well I know where thou dost lie; I saw thee through the curtain peeping, That fringes Zenophelia's eye.

The poets abound with conceits on the archery of the eyes, but few have turned the thought so naturally as Apacreon. Ronsard gives to the eyes of his mistress "un petit camp d'amours."

ODE XXVII

This ode forms a part of the preceding in the Vatican MS., but I have conformed to the editions in translating them separately. "Compare with this (says Degen) the poem of Ramler, 'Wahrzeicher der Liebe' in Lyr. Blumenlese, lib. iv. p. 313."

But in the lover's glowing eyes,

The inlet to his bosom lies;] "We cannot see into the heart," says Madame Dacier. But the lover answers.

Il cor ne gli occhi et ne la fronte ho scritto.

M. La Fosse has given the following lines, as enlarging on the thought of Anacreon-

Lorsque je vois un amant, il cache en vain son tourment. A le trahir tout conspire, Sa langueur, son embarras, Tout ce qu'il peut faire ou dire, Même ce qu'il ne dit pas.

In vain the lover tries to veil
The flame that in his bosom lies;
His checks' confusion tells the tale,
We read it in his languid eyes:
And while his words the heart betray,
His silence speaks ev'n more Than they.

ODE XXVIII

This ode is referred to by La Mothe le Vayer, who, I believe, was the author of that curious little work, called Hexameron Rustique. He makes use of this, as well as the thirty-fifth, in his ingenious but indelicate explanation of Homer's Cave of the Nymphs (Journée Quatrième).

While Love, at hand, to finish all,

Tipp'd every arrow's point with gall;] 'Thus Claudian--

Labuntur gemini fontes, hic flulcis, amarus Alter, et infusis corrumpit mella venenis, Unde Cupidineas armavit fama sagittas.

In Cyprus' isle two rippling fountains fall, And one with honcy flows, and one with gall; In these, if we may take the tale from fame, The son of Venus dips his darts of flame.

See Alciatus, emblem 91, on the close connection which subsists between sweets and bitterness. "Apes ideo pungunt (says Petronius), quia ubi dulce, ibi et acidum invenies."

The allegorical description of Cupid's employment, in Horace, may vie with this before us in fancy, though not in delicacy—

. . . ferus et Cupido

 Semper ardentes acuens sagittas Cote cruentà.

And Cupid, sharpening all his fiery darts, Upon a whetstone stain'd with blood of hearts.

Secundus has borrowed this, but has somewhat softened the image by the omission of the epithet "cruenta"—

Fallor an ardentes acuebat cote sagittas? (eleg. 1).

ODE XXIX

Ocs -loving is a painful theil',

And not to love more painful still, etc.] The following Anacegontic, addressed by Menage to Daniel Huet, enforces with much grace the "necessity of loving"— Περι τοι δειν φιλησαι. Προς Πετρον Δανιηλα Υεττον.

Μεγα θαιμα των αοιδων, Χαριτων θαλος, Υεττι. Φιλεωμεν, ω έταιρε. Φιλιησαν οί σοφισται. Φιλεησε σεμνος ανηρ, Το τεκνον του Σωφρονισκου, Σοφιης πατηρ απασης. Ti &' aven yevoit' Epwros; Λκονη μεν εστι ψυχης.1 Πτεριη εσσιν εις Ολυμπου, Κατακειμένοις αναιρεί. Βραδεας τετηγμενοισι Βελεεσι εξαγειρει. Πιρι λαμπαδος φαεινω Ρυπαρωτερους καθαιρει. Φιλεωμεν ουν. Υεττε.

1 This line is borr wed from an epigram by Alpheus of Mitylene which Menage, I think, says somewhere he was himself the first to produce to the world—

Juzz: serir Epus azerr.

Φιλεωμέν ω έταιος.

ASIKWS OC LOLDODOLYTL Αγιους ερωτας ήμων Κακον ενξυμαι το μουνον. 'Iva un fivait' excivos Φιλεειν τε και φιλεισθαι. Thou! of tunctul bands the first. Thou! by all the Graces nurst; Friend! each other friend above. Come with me, and learn to love. Loving is a simple lore, Graver men have learn'd before : Nay, the boast of former ages, Wisest of the wisest sages, Sophroniscus' prudent son, Was by love's illusion won. Oh! how heavy love would move, If we knew not how to love! Love's a whetstone to the mind; Thus 'tis pointed, thus refined When the soul detected hes, Love can waft it to the skies. When in languor sleeps the heart, Love can wake it with his dart: When the mind is dull and dark. Love can light it with his spark! Come, oh! come then, let us haste All the bliss of love to taste; Let us love both night and day, Let us love our lives away !

And when hearts, from loving free, (If indeed such hearts there be,) Frown upon our gentle flame,
And the swert delusion blame;
This shall be my only curse,
(Could I, could I wish them warse?)
May they ne'er the rapture prove,
Of the smile from lips we love!

ODE XXX

Barnes imagines from this allegory that our poet married very late in life. But I see nothing in the ode which alludes to matrimony, except it be the lead upon the feet of Cupid; and I agree in the opinion of Madame Dacier, in her life of the poet, that he was always too fond of pleasure to marry.

ODE XXXI

The design of this little fiction is to intimate that much greater pain attends insensibility than can ever result from the tenderest impressions of love! Longepierre has quoted an ancient epigram which bears some similitude to this ode—

Lecto compositus, vix prima silentia noctis Carpebam, et somno lumina victa dabam; Cum me savus Amor prensum, sursumque capillis Excitat, et lacerum pervigilare jubet.

Tu famulus meus, inquit, ames cum mille puellas, Solus lo, solus, dure jacere potes?

Exilio et pedibus nudis, tunicaque soluta,
Omne iter impedio, nullum iter expedio.

Nunc propero, nunc ire piget; rursumque redire
Pænitete et pudor est stare via mælia.

Ecce tacent voces hominum, strepitusque ferarum,
Et volucrum cantus, turbaque fida canum.

Solus ego ex cunctis paveo somnumque torumque,
Et sequor imperium, save Cupido, tuum,

Upon my couch I lay, at night profound,
My languid eyes in magic slumber bound,
When Cupid came and snatch'd me from my bed,
And forc'd me many a weary way to tread.
"What! (said the god) shall you, whose yows are known,

Who love so many nymphs, thus sleep alone?" I rise and follow: all the night I stray, Unshelter'd, trembling, doubtful of my way; Tracing with naked foot the painful track, Loth to proceed, yet fearful to go back. Yes, at that hour, when Nature seems interr'd, Nor warbling birds, nor lowing flocks are heard, I, I alone, a fugitive from rest, Passion my guide, and madness in my breast, Wander the world around, unknowing where, The slave of love, the victim of despair!

Till my brow dropp'd with chilly dew.] I have followed those who read tesper lopus for mesper ύδρος; the former is partly authorised by the MS. which reads πειρεν ίδρως.

And now my soul, exhausted, dying,

To my lip was faintly flying, etc.] In the original, he says his heart flew to his nose; but our manner more naturally transfers it to the lips. Such is the effect that Plato tells us he felt from a kiss, in a distich quoted by Aulus Gellius—

Την ψιχην, Αγαθωνα φιλων, επι χειλεσιν εσχον. Πλθε γαρ ή τλημων ώς διαβησομενη.

Whene'er thy nectar'd kiss I sip.

And drink thy breath, in trance divine,

My soul then flutters to my lip,

Ready to fly and mix with thine.

Aulus Gellius subjoins a paraphrase of this epigram, in which we find a number of those mignardises of expression which mark the effemination of the Latin language.

And fanning light his breezy pinion,

Rescued my soul from death's dominion;] "The Cacility with which Cupid recovers him, signifies that the sweets of love make us easily forget any solicitudes which he may occasion" (La Fosse).

ODE XXXII

We here have the poet in his true attributes reclining upon myrtles, with Cupid for his cupbearer. Some interpreters have ruined the picture by making Epws the name of his slave. None but Love should fill the goblet of Anacreon. Sappho, in one of her fragments, has assigned this office to Venus. Ελθε, Κυπρι, χρυσειαιστικ κυλικεσσιν άβροις συμμεμιγμένου θαλιαιστικέταρ ανοχούσα τουτοίσι τοις έπλιροις έμωις γεκαι σοις.

Which may be thus paraphrased-

Hither, Venus, queen of kisses, This shall be the night of blisses; This the night, to friendship dear. Thou shalt be our Hebe here. Fill the golden brimmer high, Let it sparkle like thine eye; Bid the rosy current gush. Let it mantle like thy blush. Goddess, hast thou, e'er above Seen a feast so rich in love? Not a soul that is not mine!

Not a soul that is not thine!

"Compare with this ode (says the German commentator) the beautiful poem in Ramler's Lyr. Blumenlese, lib. iv. p. 296., 'Amor als Diener.'"

ODE XXXIII

M. Bernard, the author of L'Art Cuimer, has "written a ballet called "Les Surprises de l'Amour," in which the subject of the third entrée is Anacreon, and the story of this ode suggests one of the scenes (Œuvres de Bernard, Anac., sc. 4).

The German annotator refers us here to an imitation by Uz, lib. lii., "Amor und sein Bruder"; and a poem of Kleist, "Die Heilung." La Fontaine has translated, or rather imitated, this ode.

" And who art thou," I waking cry,

"That bid'st my blissful visions fly?"] Anacreon appears to have been a voluptuary even in dreaming, by the lively regret which he expresses at being disturbed from his visionary enjoyments (see the Odes x. and xxxvii.).

'Twas Love! the little wandering sprite, etc.] See the beautiful description of Cupid, by Moschus, in his first idyl.

ODE XXXIV

In a Latin ode addressed to the grasshopper, Rapin has preserved some of the thoughts of our author—

O quæ virenti graminis in toro,
Cicada, blande sidis, et herbidos
Saltus oberras, otiosos
Ingeniosa ciere cantus.
Seu forte adultis floribus incubas,
Cæli caducis ebria fletibus, etc.
Oh thou, that on the grassy bed
Which Nature's vernal hand has spfead,

Reclinest soft, and tun'st thy song. The dewy herbs and leaves among! Whether thou ly'st on springing flowers, Drunk with the balmy morning-showers, Or, etc.

See what Licetus says about gramhoppers, cap, 93 and 185.

And chirp thy rong with such a glee, etc.] "Some authors have affirmed (says Madame Dacier) that it is only male grasshoppers which sing, and that the females are silent; and on this circumstance is founded a bon-mot of Xenarchus, the comic poet, who says, εετ' εισει οί τεττεγε ουκ ευδαιμονες, ών ταις γυναιξει ουδ' ότι ουν φωνης ευι; 'are not the grasshoppers happy in having dumb wives?'"
This note is originally Henry Stephen's; but I chose rather to make a lady my authority for it.

The Muses love thy shrilly tone, etc.] Phile, De Animal. Proprietat.. calls this insect Morgais φιλος, the darling of the Muses; and Μουσων ορνω, the bird of the Muses; and we find Plato compared for his eloquence to the grasshopper in the following punning lines of Timon, preserved by Diogenes Lagrius—

Των παντων δ' ήγειτο πλατυστατος, αλλ' αγορητης Ἡδυεπης τεττιξιν ισογραφος, οἱ θ' Ἑκαδημου Δενδρει εφεζομενοι οπα λειριοεσσαν ἰεισι.

This last line is forrowed from Homer's Iliad, γ , where there occurs the very same simile.

Melodious insect, child of earth.] Longepierre has quoted the two first lines of an epigram of Antipater from the first book of the Anthologia, where he prefers the grasshopper to the swan—

Αρκει τεττιγας μεθυσαι δροσος, αλλα πιοντες . Αειδειν Φυκνων εισι γεγωνοτεροι.

In dew, that drops from morning's wings,
'The gay Cicada sipping floats;
And, drunk with dew, his matin sings
Sweeter than any cygnet's notes.

ODE XXXV

Theocritus has imitated this beautiful ode in his nincteenth idyl; but is very inferior, I think, to his original, in delicacy of point and naïveté of expression. Spenser in one of his smaller compositions has sported more diffusely on the same subject. The poem to which I allude begins thus—

Upon a day, as Love lay sweetly slumbering *All in his mother's lap;

A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murmuring, About him flew by hap; etc. etc.

In Almeloveen's 'collection of epigrams there is one by Luxorius correspondent somewhat with the turn of Anacreon, where Love complains to his mother of being wounded by a rose.

The ode before us is the very flower of simplicity.

The infantine complainings of the little god, and the natural and impressive reflections which they draw from Venus, are beauties of inimitable grace. I may be pardoned, perhaps, for introducing here another of Menage's Anacreontics, not for its similitude to the subject of this ode, but for some faint traces of the same natural simplicity which it appears to me to have preserved.—

Ερως ποτ' εν χορειαις Ίων παρθενών αωτον. Την μοι φιλην Κομινναν. 'As elder, we moos althr Προσεδραμε' τραγηλω Sidi was to zeipas antwo Pilei ue, untep. eini. Kalorpern Koperra, My no, epitopagei, '12 mantlevos per ovaa K' ai tos de di trepairwr. 'As oppare manytheis Epos epitpiagei. Εγω, δε οι παραστσε, Un δυσγεραινέ, φημι. Κυπριν τε και Κορινναν Διαγνωσαι οι κ εχουσι Και οί βλεποντές οξυ.

As dancing o'er the enamell'd plain, The flow'ret of the virgin train,

My soul's Corinna lightly play'd, Young Cupid saw the graceful maid: He saw, and in a moment flew, And round her neck his arms he threw : Saving, with smiles of infant joy, "Oh! kiss me, mother, kiss thy hoy!" Unconscious of a mother's name. The modest virgin blush'd with shame! And angry Cupid, scarce believing That vision could be so deceiving-Thus to mistake his Cyprian dame! It made ev'n Capid blush with shame. "Be not asham'd, my boy," I cried, For I was lingering by his side; "Corinna and thy lovely mother, Believe me, are so like each other, That clearest eyes are oft betray'd. And take thy Yenus for the maid."

Zitto in his Cappricioi Pemieri has given a translation of this ode of Anacreon.

ODE XXXVI

For tenelle has translated this ode in his dialogue between Anacreon and Aristotle in the shades, where, on weighing the merits of both these personages, he bestows the prize of wisdom upon the poet.

"The German imitators of this ode age, Lessing, in his poem, 'Gestern Brüder,' etc.: Gleim, in the ode, 'An den Tod'; and Schmidt in Der Poet. Blument., Gotting. 1783, p. 7" (Degen).

That re hen Death . sme with shadowy pinion,

To wrift me to his bleak dominion, etc.] The commentators who are so fond of deputing of de lanâ caprinâ," have been very busy on the authority of the phrase lo' αν θανειν επελθη. The reading of lo' αν θανατος επελθη, which De Medenbach proposes in his Amuenitates Literatiae, was already hinted by La Fevic, who soldom suggests anything worth notice.

The goblet rich, the board of friends,

Whose social souls the goblet blends; This communion of friendship, which sweetened the bowl of Anacreon, has not been forgotten by the author of the following scholium where the blessings of life are enumerated with proverbial simplicity. Υγιαινείν μεν αρίστον ανδρί θνητω. Δευτερον δί, καλοφ φύην γενεσθαί. Το τρίτον δε, πλουτείν αδολως. Και το τεταρτον συνεβαν μετα των φίλων.

Of mortal blessings here the first is health, •

And next those charms by which the eye we move:

The third is wealth, unwounding guiltless wealth,
And then, sweet intercourse with those we love!

257

R

Notes ·

ODE XXXVII

"Compare with this ode the heautiful poem Der Traum' of Uz" (Degen).,

Le Fevre in a note upon this ode enters into an elaborate and learned justification of drunkenness; and this is probably the cause of the severe reprehension which he appears to have suffered for his Anacreon. "Fuit olim fateor (says he in a note upon Longinus), cum Sapphonem amabam. Sed ex quo illa me perditissima fæmina pene miserum perdidit cum sceleratissimo suo congerrone (Anacreontem dico, si nescis, Lector). noli sperare, etc. etc." He adduces on this ode the authority of Plato, who allowed ebriety, at the Dionysian festivals, to men arrived at their fortieth year. He likewise quotes the following line from Alexis, which he says no one who is not totally ignorant of the world can hesitate to confess the truth of-

Ουδεις φιλοποτης εστιν ανθρωπος κακος.

" No lover of drinking was ever a vicious man."

When sudden all my dream of joys,

Blushing numphs and laughing boys.

All were gone /] "Nonnus says of Bacchus, almost in the same words that Anacreon uses-

Εγρομένος δε

Παρθενον ουκ εκιχησε, και ηθελεν ηυθις ιαυειν."

Waking, he lost the phantom's charms, The nymph had faded from his arms; Again to slumber he essay'd, Again to clasp the shadbwy maid.

(Longenierre.)

" Again, Sweet sleep, that scene restore,

Oh! let me decam it o'er and o'er!"] Doctor Johnson in his preface to Shakipeare animadverting upon the commentators of that poet, who pretended, in every little coincidence of thought, to detect an imitation of some ancient poet, alludes in the following words to the line of Anacreon before us:—"I have been told that when Caliban, after a pleasing dream, says, 'I cried to sleep again,' the author imitates Anacreon, who had, like any other man, the same wish on the same occasion."

ODE XXXVIII

Compare with this beautiful ode to Bacchus the verses of Hagedorn, lib. v., Das Gesellschaftliche; and of Burger, p. 51, etc. etc." (Degen).

Him. that the snowy Queen of Charms,

So oft has foulded in her arms.] Robertellus, upon the epithalamium of Catullus, mentions an ingenious derivation of Cytherza, the name of Venus, παρα τα κευθειν τους ερωτας, which seems to hint that "Love's fairy favours are lost, when not concealed."

Alas, alas, in ways so dark,

'Tis only swine can strike a spark'] 'Whe brevity of life allows arguments for the voluptuary as well as the moralist. Among many parallel passages which Longepierse has adduced, I shall content myself with this epigram from the Anthologia—

Λοισαμενοι, Προδικη, πυκασωμεθα, και τον ακρατον Έλκωμεν, κυλικας μειζονας αραμενοι. 'Paios ὁ χαιροντων εστι filos. είτα τα λοιπα Γηρας κωλυσει, και το τελος θανατος.

Of which the following is a paraphrase-

Let's fly, my love, from noonday's beam,
To plunge us in you cooling stream;
Then, hastening to the festal bower,
We'll pass in mirth the evening hour;
Tis thus our age of bliss shall fly,
As sweet, though passing as that sigh,
Which seems to whisper o'er your lip,
'Come, while you may, of rapture sip."
For age will steal the graceful form,
Will chill the pulse, while throbbing waim:
And death—alas! that hearts which thrill
Like yours or mine, should e'er be still!

ODE XXXIX

Snow: may o'er his head be flung,

But his heart—his heart is young.] Saint Payin makes the same distinction in a sonnet to a young girl—

Je sais bien que les destinces Ont mal compassee nos annees; Ne regatdez que mon amour, Peut-être en serez vous émue Il est jeune et n'est que du jour, Belle Iris, que je vous ai vu.

Fair and young thou bloomest now, And I full many a year have told, But read the heart and not the brow, Thou shalt not find my love is old.

My love's a child; and thou canst say

How much his little age may be.

For he was born the very day

When first I set my eyes on thee!

ODE XL

Never can heart that feels with me
Descend to be a slave to thee [] Longepierre quotes here an epigfam from the Anthologia, on account of the similarity of a particular phrase. Though hy no means Anacreontic, it is marked by an interesting simplicity which has induced me to paraphrase it, and may atone for its intrusion—

Ηλπις και συ τυχη μεγα χαιρετε, τον λιμεν' εύρον. ()υδεν εμοι χ' ύμιν, παιζετε τους μετ' εμε.

At length to Fortune, and to you, Delusive Hope! a last adieu; The charm that once beguil'd is o'er, And I have reach'd my destin'd shore. Away, away, your flattering arts May now betray some simpler hearts, And you will smile at their believing, And they shall weep at your deceiving!

Bacchus shall bid my winter bloom.

And Venus dance me to the tomb!] The same commentator has quoted an epitaph written upon our poet by Julian, in which he makes him promulgate the precepts of good fellowship even from the tomb.

Πολλακι μεν τοδ' αεισα, και εκ τυμβου δε βοησω, Πινετε, πριν ταυτην αμφιβαλησθε κονιν.

This lesson oft in life I sung,
And from my grave I still shall cry,
"Drink, mortal, drink, while time is young,
Ere death has made thee cold as I."

ODB XLI

And with some mail, who breather but love,

To wall, all noontide, through the grave, Thus

Horace—

Quid habes illius, illius Quæ spirabat amores, Quæ me surpuerat mihi (lib, iv, carm. 13).

And does there then remain but this, And hast thou lost each rosy ray Of her, who breath'd the soul of bliss, And stole me from myself away?

ODE XLII

The character of Anacreon is here very strikingly depicted. His love of social, harmonised pleasures is expressed with a warmth, amiable and endearing. Among the epigrams imputed to Anacreon is the following: it is the only one worth translation, and it breathes the same sentiments with this ode—

Ου φιλος, ός κρητημι παρα πλεω οινοποταζων, Νεικεα και πολεμου δακρυοεντα λεγει. Αλλ' όστις Μουσεων⁶τε, και αγλαα δωρ' Αφροδιτης Συμμισψων, ερατης μνησκεται ενφροσυνης.

When to the lip the brimming cup is prest,
And hearts are all afloat upon its stream,
Then banish from my board the unpolish'd guest,
Who makes the feats of war his barbarous theme.

But bring the man, who o'er his goblet wreathes. The Muse's laurel with the Cyprian flower; Oh! give me him, whose soul expansive breathes. And blends refinement with the social hour.

ODE XLIII

And while the harp, impassion'd, flings

Tuneful rapture from its strings, etc.] Respecting the harbiton a host of authorities may be collected, which, after all, leave us ignorant of the nature of the instrument. There is scarcely any point upon which we are so totally uninformed as the music of the ancients. The authors 1 extant upon the subject are, I imagine, little understood; and certainly if one of their moods was a progression by quarter-tones, which we are told was the nature of the enharmonic scale, simplicity was by no means the characteristic of their melody; for this is a nicety of progression, of which modern music is not susceptible.

The invention of the barbiton is, by Athenaus,

1 Collected by Meibomius.

attributed to Anacreon (see his fourth book, where it is called to εύρημα του Ανακρεοντος). Neanthes of Cyzicus; as equoted by Gyraldus, asserts the same; vide Chabot in Horat. on the words "Lesboum barbiton," in the first ode.

And oh, the sadness in his sigh,

As o'er his lip the accepts die!] Longepierre has quoted here an epigram from the Anthologia --

Κουρη τις μ' εφιλησε ποθεσπερα χειλεσιν ίγροις. Νεκταρ εην το φιλημα, το γαι, στομα νεκταρος επνει. Νυν πεθυω το φιλημα, πολιν τον ερωτα πεπωκως.

Of which the following paraphrase may give some idea-

The kiss that she left on my lip,
Like a dew-drop shall lingering lie;
Twas nectar she gave me to sip,
Twas nectar I drank in her sigh.

From the moment she printed that kiss,
Nor reason nor rest has been mine;
My whole soul has been drunk with the bliss.
And feels a delirium divine!

It seems as Love himself had come

To make this spot his chosen home; —] The introduction of these deities to the festival is merely allegorical. Madame Dacier thinks that the poet describes a masquerade, where these deities were personated by the company in masks. The translation will conform with either idea.

All, all are here, to hall with me

The Genius of Festivity!] Κωμος, the deity or genius of mirgh. Philostratus, in the third of his pictures, gives a very lively description of this god.

ODE XLIV

This spirited poem is a eulogy on the rose; and again, in the fifty-fifth ode, we shall find our author rich in the praises of that flower. In a fragment of Sappho in the romance of Achilles Tatius, to which Barnes refers us, the rose is fancifully styled "the eye of flowers"; and the same poetess in another fragment call? the favours of the Muse "the roses of Pieria"; see the notes on the fifty-fifth ode.

"Compare with this ode (says the German annotator) the beautiful ode of Uz, "Die Rose,"

When with the blushing, sister Graces,

The reaction residing dance he traces.] "This sweet idea of Love dancing with the Graces is almost peculiar to Anacreon" (Degen).

Likud some bright nymph through the dance, etc.]
The epithet βαθυκολπος, which he gives to the nymph, is literally "full-bosomed."

OUE XLV

Then let us never vainly stray.

In search of thorns, from pleasure's energy, etc.] 1 have thus endeavoured to convey the meaning of τι δε τον βιον πλανωμαι; according to Regnier's paraphrase of the line...

E che val, fuor della strada Del piacere alma e gradita, Vaneggiare in questa vita?

ODE XLVI

The fastidious affectation of some commentators has denounced this ode as spurious. Degen propounces the four last lines to be the patchwork of some miserable versificator, and Brunck condemns the whole ode. It appears to me, on the contrary, to be elegantly graphical; full of delicate expressions and luxuriant imagery. The abruptness of 1de mos eapos parertos is striking and spirited, and has been imitated rather languidly by Horace—

Vides ut afta stet nive candidum Soracte . . .

The imperative the is infinitely more impressive; as in Shakspeare-

But look, the morne in russet mantle clad, Walks o'er the dew of you high eastern hill.

There is a simple and poetical description of Spring in Catullus's beautiful farewell to Bithynia (carm. 44).

Barnes conjectures in his life of our poet that this ode was written after he had returned from Athens to settle in his paternal seat at Teos; where, in a little villa at some distance from the city, commanding a view of the Ægean Sea and the islands, he contemplated the beauties of nature and enjoyed the felicities of retirement (vid. Barnes in Anac. Vita. § xxxv.). This supposition, however unauthenticated, forms a pleasing association, which renders the poem more interesting.

Chevreau says that Gregory Nazianzenus has paraphrased somewhere this description of Spring; but I cannot meet with it (see Chevreau, Œuvres Mèlées).

"Compare with this ode (says Degen) the verses of Hagedorn, book fourth, 'Der Fruhling,' and book fifth, 'Der Mai.'"

While virgin Graces, warm with May, π Fling roses o'er her dewy way! De Pauw reads, Χαριτας ρόδα βρυουσεν, "the roses display their graces." This is not uningenious; but we lose by it the beauty of the personification, to the boldness of which Regnier has rather frivolously objected.

The muring billows of the deep

Have languished into silent sleep, etc.] It has been justly remarked that the liquid flow of the line, απαλυνεται γαληνη, is perfectly expressive of the tranquillity which it describes.

And cultur'd field, and recording stream, etc.] By Bporus epya, "the works of men" (says Baxter), he means cities, temples, and towns, which are then illuminated by the beams of the sun,

ODE XIVII

But brandishing a ray flash, etc.] Λσκος was a kind of leathern vessel for wine, very much in use, as about seem by the proverb ασκος και θυλακος, which was applied to those who were intemperate in eating and drinking. This proverb is mentioned in some verses quoted by Athenaus from the Hesione of Alexis.

The only thyrum e'er Pllaust | Phornutus assigns as a reason for the consecration of the thyrus to Bacches, that inebriety often renders the support of a stick very necessary.

ODE XI,VIII

Iny leaves my brow entreining, etc.] "The ivy was consecrated to Bacchus (says Mqufaucon), because he formerly lay hid under that tree, or, as others will have it, because its leaves resemble those of the vine." Other reasons for its consecration, and the use of it in garlands at banquets, may be tound in Longepierre, Barnes, etc. etc.

Arm ye, arm ye, men of might,

Hasten to the sanguine fight: 1 have adopted the interpretation of Regnier and others—

Altri segua Marte fero; Che sol Bacco è 'l mio conforto,

ODE XLIX

"This, the preceding ode, and a few more of the same character, are merely chansons à hoire;—the effusions probably of the moment of conviviality, and afterwards sung, we may imagine, with rapture throughout Greece. But that interesting association by which they always recalled the convivial emotions that produced them, can now be little felt even by the most enthusiastic reader; and much less by a phlegmatic grammarian, who sees nothing in them but dialects and particles.

Who, with the sunshine of the bowl,

Thazes the reinter of our soul, etc.] Acques is the title which he gives to Bacchus in the original. It is a curious circumstance that Plutarch mistook the name of Levi among the Jews for Aria (one of the bacchanal cries), and accordingly supposed that they worshipped Bacchus.

ODE L

Faber thinks this ode spurious; but, I believe, he is singular in his opinion. It has all the spirit of our author. Like the waeath which he presented in the dream, "it smells of Anacreon."

The form of the original is remarkable. It is a kind of song of seven quatrain stanzas, each beginning with the line ---

'Οτ' εγω πιω τον οινον.

The first stanza alone is incomplete, consisting but of three lines.

"Compare with this poem (says Degen) the verses of Hagedorn, lib. v., 'Der Wein,' where that divine poet has wantoned in the praises of wine."

When wine I quaff, before my eyes

Dreams of poetic glory rise;] "Anacreon is not the only one (says Longepierre) whom wine has inspired with poetry. We find an epigram in the first book of the Anthologia which begins thus—()ινος τοι χαριεντι μεγας πελει ίππος αοιδφ, Υδωρ δε πινων, καλον ου τεκοις επος.

If with water you fill up your glasses, You'll never write anything wise; For wine's the true horse of Parnassus, Which carries a bard to the skies!

And while we dance through vernal bowers, etc.] If some of the translators had observed Doctor Trapp's caution with regard to πολυανθεσιν μ' εν αυραις, "Cave ne cœlum intelligas," they would not have spoiled the simplicity of Anacreon's fancy by such extravagant conceptions as the following—

Quand je hois, mon œil s'imagine Que, dans un tourbillon plein de parfums divers, Bacchus m'importe dans les airs, Rempli de sa liqueur divine.

Or this-

Indi me mena Mentre lieto ebro, deliro, Baccho in giro 4 Per la vaga aura serena.,

When, with young revellers, round the borel,

The old themselves grow young in soul?] Subjoined to Gail's edition of Angereon we find some curious letters upon the Olagon of the ancients which appeared in the French journals. At the opening of the Odfon in Paris, the managers of that spectacle requested Professor Gail to give them some uncommon name for their fetes. He suggested the word "Thiase," which was adopted that the literation Paris questioned the propriety of the term, and addressed their criticisms to Gail through the medium of the public prints.

ODE LI

Alberti has imitated this ode; and Capilupus in the following epigram has given a version of it—

Cur, Lalage, mea vita, meos contemnis amores?
Cur fugis e nostro pulchra puella sinu?
Ne fugias, sint sparsa licet mea tempora canis,
Inque tuo roseus fulgeat ore color.
Aspice ut intextas deceant quoque flore corollas
Candida purpureis lilia mista rosis.

Oh! why repel my soul's impassion'd vow, And fly, beloved maid, these longing arms?

Is it that wintry time has strew'd my brow, While thine are all the summer's roseate charms?

See the rich garland cull'd in vernal weather,
Where the young rose-bud with the lily glows;
So, in Love's wreath we both may twins together,
And I the lily be, and thou the rose.

See, in yonder flowery braid,

Gull'd for thee, my blushing main! !! In the same manner that Anacreon pleads for the whiteness of his locks from the beauty of the colour in garlands, a shepherd in Theocritus endeavours to recommend his black hair—

Και το ιον μελαν εστι, και ά γραπτα ὑακινθος, Αλλ' εμπας εν τοις στεφανοις τα πρωτα λεγωνται." (Longepierre, Barnes, etc.)

ODE LH

"This is doubtless the work of a more modern poet than Anacreon; for at the period when he lived rhetoricians were not known" (Degen).

Though this ode is found in the Vatican manuscript, I am much inclined to agree in this argument against its authenticity; for though the dawnings of the art of rhetoric might already have appeared, the first who gave it any celebrity was Corax of Syracuse, and he flourished in the century after Anacreou,

Our poet anticipated the ideas of Epicurus in his aversion to the labours of learning, as well as his devotion to voluptuousness. Πασαν παιδειαν μακαριοι φειγετε, said the philosopher of the garden in a letter to Pythocles.

Teach me this, and let me treine

Some fond, responsive heart to mine.] By χρυσης Aφροδιτης here I understand some beautiful girl, in the same manner that Λυσιος is often used for wine. "Golden" is frequently an epithet of beauty. Thus in Virgil, "Venus aurea"; and in Propertius, "Cynthia aurea." Tibullus, however, calls an old woman "golden."

The translation d'Autori Anonimi, as usual, wantons on this passage of Anacreon-

E m' insegui con piu rare Forme accorte d'involare Ad amabile beltade Il bel cinto d'onestade.

And there's an end - for ah, you know
They drink but little wine below !] Thus Mainard...

La Mort nous guette; et quand ses lois Nous ont enfermés une fois Au sein d'une fosse profonde, Alieu bons vins et bon repas;

Ma science ne trouve pas Des cabarets en l'autre monde,

From Mainard, Gombauld, and De Cailly, old French poets, some of the best epigroms of the English language have been borrowed."

ODE LIII

Bid the blush of summer's rose

Burn upon my forchead's snowes, etc. | Licetus in his Hieroglyphica, quoting two of our poet's odes. where he calls to his attendants for garlands, remarks, "Constat igitur floreas coronas poetis et potantibus in symposio convenire, non autem sanientibus et philosophiam affectantibus,"-- It appears that wreaths of flowers were adapted for poets and revellers at banquets, but by no means became those who had pretensions to wisdom and philosophy," On this principle, in his 152nd chapter he discovers a refinement in Virgil, describing the garland of the poet Silenus, as fallen off; which distinguishes, he thinks, the divine intoxication of Silenus from that of common drunkards, who always wear their crowns while they drink. Such is the "labor ineptiarum" of commentators!

He still can hirs the goblet's brim, etc.] Wine is 276 prescribed by Galen as an excellent medicine for old men: "Quod frigidos et humoribus expletos calefaciat, etc."; bue Nature was Anacreon's physician.

There a proverb in Eriphus, as quoted by Athenaus, which says "that wine makes an old man dance, whether he will or not."

Λογος εστ' αρχαιος, ου κακως εχων, Οινον λεγουσι τους γεροντας, ω πατερ, Πειθειν χορεειν ου θελοντας.

ODE LIV

"This ode is written upon a picture which represented the rape of Europa" (Madame Dacier),

It may probably have been a description of one of those coins which the Sidonians struck off in honour of Europa, representing a woman carried across the sea by a bull. Thus Natalis Comes. Ich. viii. cap. 23: "Sidonii numismata cum fæmina tauri dorso insidente ac mare transfretante cuderunt in ejus honorem." In the little treatise upon the goddess of Syria attributed very falsely to Lucian, there is mention of this coin, and of a temple dedicated by the Sidonians to Astarté, whom some, it appears, confounded with Europa.

The poet Moschue has left a very beautiful idyl on the story of Europa.

No: he descends from climes above,

He looks the God, he breathes of Jove!] Thus

Moschus—

Κρυψε θερν και τρεψε δεμας και γινετο ταυρος.

The God forgot himself, his heaven. for love, And a bull's form belied th' almighty Jove.

ODE LV

This ode is a brilliant panegyric on the rose. "All antiquity (says Barnes) has produced nothing more beautiful."

From the idea of peculiar excellence, which the ancients attached to this Jower, arose a pretty proverbial expression, used by Aristophanes, according to Suid.s, ροδα μ' ειρηκας, "You have spoken roses," a phrase somewhat similar to the "dire des fleurettes" of the French. In the same idea of excellence originated, I doubt not, a very curious application of the word ροδον, for which the inquisitive reader may consult Gaulminus upon the epithalamium of our poet, where it is introduced in the romance of Theodorus. Muretus in one of his elegies calls his mistress his rose—

Jam te igitur rursus teneo, formosula, jam te (Quid trepidas?) teneo; jam, rosa, te teneo (eleg. 8).

Now I again may clasp thee, dearest, What is there now, on earth, thou fearest? Again these longing &rms infold thee, Again, my rose, again I hold thee.

This, like most of the terms of gudearment in the modern Latin poets, is taken from Plantus; they were vulgar and colloquial in his time, but are among the elegancies of the modern Latinists.

Passeratius alludes to the ode before us in the beginning of his poem on "The Rose"...

Carmine digna rosa est; vellém caneretur ut illam Teius argutá cecinit testudine vates.

Resplendent rose! to thee we'll sing;] I have passed over the line συν έταιρει ανξει μελπην, which is corrupt in this original reading, and has been very little improved by the affinotators. I should suppose it to be an interpolation, if it were not for a line which occurs afterwards · φερι δη φισιν λεγθμεν.

And Venus, in its fresh-bloven leaves, etc.] Belleau, in a note upon an old French poet, quoting the original here αφροδίσιων τ' αθυρμα, translates it: · · · Comme les délices et mignardises de Venus."

Oft has the poet's magic tongue

The rose's fair luxuviance sung, etc.] The following is a fragment of the Lesbian poetess. It is cited in the romance of Achilles Tatius, who appears to have resolved the numbers into prose. Ει τοις ανθεσιν ηθελεν ὁ Ζευς επιθειναι βασιλεα, το ροδον αν των ανθεων εβασιλευε. γης εστι κοσμος, φιτων αγλαισμα, οφθαλμος ανθεων, λειμωνοι ερυθημα, καλλές αστράπτον. Ερωτος πνει, Αφροδίτην προξένει, ευειδεσι φυλλοις κομά, ευκινητοις πεταλοις τρυφά, το πεταλου τω Ζεφυρω γελά.

If Jove would give the leafy bowers. A queen for all their world of flowers, The rose would be the choice of Jove, And blush, the queen of every grove. Sweetest child of weeping morning, Gem, the vest of earth adorning. Eye of gardens, light of lawns, Nursling of soft summer dawns; Love's own earliest sigh it breathes, Beauty's brow with lustre wreathes. And, to young Zephyr's warm caresses, Spreads abroad its verdant tresses. Till, blushing with the wanton's play. Its cheek wears ev'n a richer ray!

When morning paints the orient skies,

Her fingers burn with roseate dyes, etc.] In the original here, he enumerates the many epithets of beauty, borrowed from roses, which were used by the poets, παρα των σοφων. We see that poets were dignified in Greece with the title of sages: even the careless Anacreon, w'o lived but for love and voluptuousness, was called by Plato the wise Anacreon —" fuit have sapientia squondam."

Preserve the cold interest day, etc.] He here alludes to the use of the rose in embalming; and, perhaps (as Barnes thinks), to the rosy unguent with which Venus anointed the corpse of Hector (Homer's Iliad, ψ). It may likewise regard the ancient practice of putting garlands of roses on the dead, as in Statius, Thel., lib. x, 782.

. . . Hi sertis, hi veris honore soluto Accumulant artus, patriâque in sede reponunt Corpus odoratum;

Where "veris honor," though it mean every kind of flowers, may seem more particularly to refer to the rose, which our poet in another ode calls έαρος μελημα. We read in the Hi.roglyphic of Pietius, lib. Is., that some of the ancients used to order in their wills that roses should be annually scattered on their tombs, and Pierius has adduced some sepulchral inscriptions to this purpose.

And mocks the water of decay | When he says that this flower prevails over time itself, he still alludes to its efficacy in embalmment (tenera poneret ossa rosa—Propert, lib. i. eleg. 17), or perhaps to the subsequent idea of its fragrance surviving its becuty a for he can scarcely mean to praise for duration the "nimium breves flores" of the rose. Philostratus compares this flower with love, and says that they both defy the influence of time; χροδον δε ουτε Ερως, ουτε ροδα οιδεν. Unfortunately the similitude lies not in thei, duration, but their transience.

Sweet as in youth, its balmy breath
Diffuses odour even in death!] Thus Casper
Barlaus in his Ritus Nuptrarum—

Ambrosium late rosa tune quoque spargit odorem. Cum fluit, aut multo languida sole jacet.

Nor then the rose its odour loses, When all its flushing beauties die; Nor less ambrosial balm diffuses, When withgr'd by the solar eye,

With nectar drops, a ruby tide,

The sweetly orient buds they dyed, etc.] Whe author of the "Pervigilium Veneris" (a poem attributed to Catullus, the style of which appears to me to have all the laboured luxuriance of a much later period) ascribes the tincture of the rose to the blood from the wound of Adonis—

. . . Rosæ
Fusæ aprino de cruore—bording to the emendation of Lipsius. In the following epigram this hue is differently ac-

Illa quidem studiosa sum defendere Adonim, Gradivus stricto quem petit ense ferox, Affixit duris vestigia cæca rosetis. Albaque divino picta cruote losa est.

While the enamour'd queen of joy
Flies to protect her lovely boy,
On whom the jealous war-god rushes;
She treads upon a thorned rose,
And while the wound with crimson flows,
The snowy flow'ret feels her blood, and blushes!

ODE LVI

"Compare with this elegant ode the verses of Uz, lib. i. Die Weinlese'" (Degen).

This appears to be one of the hymns which were sung at the anniversary festival of the vintage; one of the επιληνιοι ύμνοι, as our post-himself terms them in the fifty-ninth ode. We cannot help feeling a sort of reverence for these classic relics of the religion of antiquity. Horace may be supposed to have written the nineteenth ode of his second book, and the twenty-fifth of the third, for some bacchanalian celebration of this kind.

Which, sparkling in the cup of mirth,

Illiminate the ions of earth! In the original, ποτον αστονον κομιζως. Madame Dacier thinks that the poet here had the nepenthe of Homer in his mind Odyssey, lib. iv.). This nepenthe was a something of exquisite charm infused by Helen into the wine of her guests, which had the power of dispelling every anxiety. A French writer, De Mere, conjectures that this spell, which made the bowl so beguiling, was the charm of Helen's conversation; see Bayle, art. "Helène."

ODE LVII

This ode is a very animated description of a picture of Venus on a discus, which represented the goddess in her first emergence from the waves. About two centuries after our poet wrote, the pencil of the artist Apelles embellished this subject in his famous painting of the Venus Anadyomene, the model of which, as Pliny informs us, was the beautiful Campaspe given to him by Alexander; though, according to Natida Comes, lib. vii. cap. 16, it was Phryne who sat to Apelles for the face and breast of this Venus.

There are a few blemishes, in the reading of the ode before us, which have influenced Faber, Heyne, Brunck, etc., to denounce the whole poem as spurious. But, "non ego paucis offendar maculis." I think it is quite beautiful enough to be authentic.

Whose was the artist hand that spread

Upon this dish the αcan', bid ? The abruptness of αρα τις τορευσε πουτου is finely expressive of sudden admiration, and is one of those beauties which we cannot but admire in their source, though, by frequent imitation, they are now become familiar and unimpressive.

And all that mystery loves to screen,

Fancy, like Faith, adores unseen, etc.] The picture here has all the delicate character of the semi-reducta Venus, and affords a happy specimen of what the poetry of passion ought to be-glowing but through a veil, and stealing upon the heart from concealment. Few of the ancients have at ajned this modesty of description, which, like the golden cloud that hung over Jupiter and Juno, is impervious to every beam but that of fancy.

Her hosom, like the deτυ-τυακή Ι του, etc.] " Ροδιτων (says an anonymous annotator) is a whimsical epithet for the bosom." Neither Catullus nor Gray have been of his opinion. The former has the expression—

En hic in roseis latet papillis,

And the latter-

3

Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd hours, etc.

Crettus, a modern Latinist, might indeed be consured for too vague a use of the epithes 'rosy," when he applies it to the eyes: "e roseis oculis."

'... Young Desire, etc.] In the original, 'Ιμεροs, who was the same deity with Jocus among the Romans. Aurelius Augurellus has a poem beginning—

Invitat olim Bacchus ad cœnam suos Comon, Jocum, Cupidinem,

Which Parnell has closely imitated—
Gay Bacchus, liking Estcourt's wine,
A noble meal bespoke us;
And for the guests that were to dine,
Brought Comus, Love, and Jocus, etc.

ODE LVIII

I have followed Barnes's arrangement of this ode, which, though deviating somewhat from the Vatican MS., appears to me the more natural order.

When Gold, as fleet as zephyr's pinion, Escapes like any faithless minion, etc.]r In the 286 original, 'O δραπετης ὁ χριστος. There is a kind of pun in these words, as Madame Dacier has already remarked; for Chrystos, which signifies gold, was also a frequent name for a slave. In one of Lucian's d'alogues, there is, I think, a similar play upon the word, where the followers of Chrysippus are called golden fishes. The puns of the ancients are, in general, even more vapid than our own; some of the best are those recorded of Diogenes,

And flies me (as he flies me ever), etc.] Act d', act pe peryet. This grace of iteration has already been taken notice of. Though sometimes merely a playful beauty, it is peculiarly expressive of impassioned sentiment, and we may easily believe that it was one of the many sources of that energetic sensibility which breathed through the style of Sappho; see Gyrald. Vet. Pact. Did. 9. It will not be said that this is a mechanical ounament by any one who can feel its charm in those lines of Catullus, where he complains of the infidelity of his mistress, Lesbia.—

Cœli, Lesbia nostra. Lesbia illa, Illa Lesbia, quam Catullus unam, Plus quam se atque suos amavit omnes, Nunc, etc.

Si sic omnia dixisset,!—but the rest does not bear citation.

They dash'd the wine-cup, that, by him,
W. filled with kisses to the brim.] Original...

Φιληματών δε κεδνων, Ποθων κυπελλα κιρνης.

Horace has "Desiderique temperare poculum," not figuratively, however, like Anacreon, but importing the love-philtres of the witches. By "cups of kisses" our poet may allude to a favourite gallantry among the ancients of drinking when the lips of their mistresses had touched the brim—

"Or leave a kiss within the cup, And I'll not ask for wine," as in Ben Jonson's translation from Philostratus; and Lucian has a conceit upon the same idea, "Ίνα και πινης ἄμα και φιλης," "that you may at once both drink and kiss."

ODE LIX

The title Επίληνιος ύμνος, which Barnes has given to this ode, is by no means appropriate. We have already had one of those hymns (ode 56), but this is a description of the vintage; and the title εις οινον, which it bears in the Vatican MS., is more correct than any that have been suggested.

Degen, in the true spirit of literary scepticism, doubts that this ode is genuine, without assigning any reason for such a suspicion:—"non amo te, Sabidi, nec possum dicere quare." But this is far from satisfactory criticism.

ODE LX

This hymn to Apollo is supposed not to have been written by Anacreon; and it is undoubtedly rather a sublimer flight than the Teian wing is accustomed to soar. But, in a poet of whose works so small a proportion has reached us, diversity of style is by no means a safe criterion. If we knew Horace but as a satirist, should we easily believe there could dwell such animation in his lyre? Suidas says that our poet wrote hymns, and this perhaps is one of them. We can perceive in what an altered and imperfect state his work, are at present, when we find a scholiast upon Horace citing an ode from the third book of Anacreon.

And how the tender, timed maid

Flow trembling to the kindly shade, etc.] Original....

Το μεν εκπεφει γε κεντρον. Φισεως δ' αμειψε μορφην.

I find the word κεντρον here has a double force, 280

as it also signifies that "omnium parentem, quam sanctus Numa, etc. etc." (see Martial). In order to confirm this import of the word here, those who are curious in new readings may place the stop after φυσεως, thus—

Το μεν εκπεφειίγε κεντρον Φισεως, δ' αμειψε μορφην.

Still be Ana.reon, still inspire

The descent of the Team lyre: The original is Τον Ανακρεοντα μιμου. I have translated it under the supposition that the hymn is by Anacreon; though I fear, from this very line, that his claim to it can scarcely be supported.

Toν Ανακρεοντα μιμου, "Imitate Anacreon," Such is the lesson given us by the lyrist; and if, in poetry, a simple elegance of sentiment, enriched by the most playful felicities of fancy, be a charm which invites or deserves imitation, where shall we find such a guide as Anacreon? In morality too, with some little reserve, we need not blush, I think, to follow in his tootsteps. For if his song be the language of his heart, though luxurious and relaxed, he was artless and benevolent; and who would not forgive a few irregularities, when atoned for by virtues so rare and so endearing? When we think of the sentiment in those lines—

Away! I hate the slanderous dart, Which steals to wound th' unwary heart, how many are there in the world to whom we would wish to say, Tor Ανακρεοντα μιμου!

Here ends the last of the odes in the Vatican MS., whose authority helps to confirm the genuine antiquity of them all, though a few have stolen among the number, which we may hesitate in attributing to Anacreon. In the little essay prefixed to this translation, I observed that Barnes has quoted this manuscript incorrectly, relying upon an imperfect copy of it, which Isaac Vossius had taken. I shall just mention two or three instances of this inaccuracy—the first which occur to me. In the ode of the Dove, on the words Πτεροισι συγκαλυψω, he says, "Vatican MS. συσκιαζων, etiam Prisciano invito": but the M5, reads συνκαλυψω, with συσκιασω interlined. Degen too, on the same line, is somewhat In the twenty-second ode of this series, line thirteenth, the MS, has reven with a, interliged, and Barnes imputes to it the reading of revon. In the fifty-seventh, line twelfth, he professes to have preserved the reading of the MS. Alalmusun o' su' autn, while the latter has αλαλημένος δ' επ' αιτα. Almost all the other annotators have transplanted these errors from Barnes.

ODE LXI

The intrusion of this melancholy ode among the careless levities of our poet, reminds us of the skeletons which the Egyptians used to hang up in their banquet-rooms to inculcate a thought of mortality even amidst the dissipations of mirth. If it were not for the beauty of its numbers, the Teian Muse, should disown this ode. "Quid habet illius, illius quæ spirabat amores?"

To Stobæus we are indebted for it.

Bloomy graces, dalliance gay.

All the floreers of life decay.] Horace often, with feeling and elegance, deplores the fugacity of human enjoyments. See book ii. ode 11; and thus in the second epistle, book ii.

Singula de nobis anni prædantur euntes; Eripuere jocos, venerem, convivia, ludum,

The wing of every passing day Withers some blooming joy away; And wafts from our enamour'd arms The banquet's mirth, the virgin's chaims,

Dreary to the thought of dying 'etc.] Regnier, a libertine French poet, has written some sonners on the approach of death, full of gloomy and trembling repentance. Chaulieu, however, supports more consistently the spirit of the Epicurean philosopher. See his poem addressed to the Marquis de Lafare--

Plus j'approche du terme et moins je le redoute, etc.

And, when once the journey's o'er,

Ah! we can return no more!] Scaliger, upon Carullus's well-known lifter, "Qui nunc is per iter, eta." remarks that Acheron, with the same idea, is called ανεδοδος by Theocritus, and δυσεκδρομος by Nicander,

ODE LXII

This ode consists of two fragments, which are to be found in Athenaus, book x., and which Barnes, from the similarity of their tendency, has combined into one. I think this a very justifiable liberty, and have adopted it in some other fragments of our poet.

Degen refers us here to verses of Uz, lib, iv., ... Der Trinker,"

But let the water amply flow,

To coul the grape's intemperate glove, etc.] It was Amphiciyon who first taught the Greeks to mix water with their wine; in commemoration of which circumstance they erected altars to Bacchus and the nymphs. On this mythological allegory the following epigram is founded—

· Ardentem ex utero Semeles lavere Lyæum l'aiadem extincto fulminis igne sacri;

Cum nymphis igitur tractabilis, at sine nymphis Candenti rur-us fulmine corripitur.

Pierius Valerianus.)

Which is, non-verbum verbo -

While heavenly fire consum'd his Theban dame, A Naiad caught young Bacchus from the flame. And dipp'd him burning in her purest lymph; Hence, still he loves the Naiad's crystal urn, And when his native fires too fiercely burn, Seeks the cool waters of the fountain-nymph.

ODE LXIII

"This fragment is preserved in Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom, lib. vi., and in Arsenius, Collect. Grac." (Barnes).

It appears to have been the opening of a hymn in praise of Love.

ODE LXIV

This hymn to Diana is extant in Hephastion. There is an anecdote of our poet which has led some to doubt whether he ever wrote any odes of this kind. It is related by the scholiast upon Pindar (Isthmion., ode ii. v. 1, as citefe by Barnes) that Anacreon being asked why he addressed all his hymns to women and none to the deities? answered, 6 Because women are my deities."

I have assumed, it will be seen, in reporting this anecdote the same liberty which I have thought it right to take in translating some of the odes; and it were to be wished that these little infidelities were always allowable in interpreting the writings of the ancients; thus, when nature is forgotten in the original, in the translation "tamen usque recurret."

Turn, to Lethe's river turn,

There thy canquich'd people mount | Lethe, a river of Ionia, according to Strabo, falling into the Meander. In its neighbourhood was the city called Magnesia, in favour of whose inhabitants our poet is supposed to have addressed this supplication to Diana. It was written 'as Madame Dacier conjectures' on the occasion of some battle, in which the Magnesians had been defeated.

ODE LXV

This ode, which is addressed to some Thracian girl, exists in Herachiles, and has been imitated very frequently by Horace, as all the annotators have remarked. Madame Dacier rejects the allegory, which runs so obviously through the poem, and supposes it to have been addressed to a young mare belonging to Polycrates, Pierius in the fourth book of his Higgshifter cites this ode, and informs us that the horse was the hieroglyphical emblem of pride.

ODE LXVI

This ode is introduced in the Romance of Theodorus Prodromus, and is that kind of epithalamium which was sung like a scholium at the nuptial banquet.

Among the many works of the impassioned Sappho of which time and ignorant superstition have deprived us, the loss of her epithalamiums is not one of the least that we deplore. The following lines are cited as a relic of one of those priems:

Ολβιε γαμώρε, σοι μεν δη γαμος ώς αραο, Επτετελεστ', εχεις δε παρθενον αν αραο.

See Scaliger in his Pottes on the Epithalamium.

And foster there an inf. nt tre .

To bloom like h.r. and tower like thee!] Original, Κυπαριττός δε πεφυκοί σευ ενί κηπω. Passeratius, upon the words "cum castum amisit florem," in the Noptial Song of Catullus, after explaining "flos" in somewhat a simplar sense to that which Gaulmings attributes to ρόδον, says. "Hoftum quoque vocant in quo flos ille carpitur, et Græcis ληπον εστι το εφηβαίον χυναίκων."

I may remark, in passing, that the author of the Greek version of this charming ode of Catullus has neglected a most striking and Anacreontic beauty in those verses, "Ut flos in septis, etc.," which is the repetition of the line, "Multi-illum pueri, multa optavère puella," with the slight alteration of nulli and nulla. Catullus himself, however, has been equally injudicious in his version of the famous ode of Sappho: having translated γελωσας ίμεροεν, but omitted all notice of the accompanying charm, άδυ φωνευσας. Herace has caught the spirit of it more faithfully:--

Dulce ridentem Lalagen amabo, Dulce loquentem,

ODE LXVII

The fragment is preserved in the third book of Strabo,

Of the Castessian prince my own; He here 207 alludes to Arganthonius, who lived, according to Lucian, a hundred and fifty years; and reigned, according to Herodotti. eighty (see Barnes).

ODE LXVIII

This is composed of two fragments—the seventieth and eighty-first in Barnes. They are both found in Eustathius.

ODE LXIX

Three fragments form this little ode, all of which are preserved in Athenxus. They are the eighty-second, seventy-fifth, and eighty-third in Barnes.

. And every guest, in shade his head.

Three little fragrant shaplets spread; Longepierre, to give an idea of the luxurious estimation in which garlands were held by the ancients, relates an anecdote of a courtezan, who in order to gratify three lovers, without leaving case for jealousy with any of them, gave a kiss to one, let the other drink after her? and put a garland on the brow of the third: so that each was satisfied with his favour, and flattered himself with the preference.

This circumstance recembles very much the subject of one of the timens of Savari de Mauleon, a troubadour see L'Histoir. Littérais des Trouba-Journes. The recital is a curious picture of the puerile gallantries of chivalry.

ODE LXX

Compiled by Barnes from Athenaus, Hephastion, and Arsenius see Barnes, 80th),

ODE LXXI

This I have formed from the eighty-fourth and eighty-fifth of Barnes's edition. The two fragments are found in Athenaus.

The rurding favon, that in come shade

Its anther'd mother leaves behind, etc.], in the original---

'Ος εν ύλη κεροεστης Απολειφθεις ύπο μητρος.

"Horned" hele, undoubtedly, seems a strange epitnet; Madame Dacier, however, observes that Sophocles, Callimachus, etc., have all applied it in the very same manner, and she seems to agree in the conjecture of the scholiast upon Pindar, that perhaps horns are not always peculiar to the males. I think we may with more ease conclude it to be a ligence of the poet, "jussit habere puellam cornua,"

ODE LXXII

This fragment is preserved by the scholiast upon Aristophanes, and is the eighty-seventh in Barnes,

OPE LXXIII

This is to be found in Hephastion, and is the eighty-ninth of Barnes's edition,

I have omitted, from among these scraps, a very considerable fragment imputed to our poet, Ξανθη δ' Ευρυπολη μέλει, etc., which is preserved in the twelfth book of Athenaus, and is the ninety-first in Barnes. If it was really Anacteon who wrote it, the nil fuit unquam sic impar shift is in a style of gross satire, and abounds with expressions that never could be gracefully translated.

ODE LXXIV

A fragment preserved by Dion Chrysostom, Orn, ii.de Regnossee Barnes, 93rd.).

ODE LXXV

This fragment, which is extant in Athenaus (Barnes, 1918t), is supposed, on the authority of Chamaleon, to have been addressed to Sappho We have also a stanza attributed to her, which some tomancers have supposed to be her answer to Anacreon. "Mais par malheur as Bayle says. Sappho vint au monde environ cent on six vingt ans avant Anacreon" Novelle, I let R p. 1. Let. tom, h. de Novembre 1684. The following is her fragment, the compliment of which is finely imagined; she supposes that the Muse has dictated the verses of Anacreon—

Κεινον, ω χρυσοθρονε Μοι σ' ενισπις Ύμνον, εκ της καλλιγιναικός ετθλάς Τηίος χωράς όν αείδε τερπνώς Πρεσθές αγαιός.

Dy Muse! who sit ston golden throne, Full many a hymn of witching tone The Teian sage is taught by thee;

But, Goddess, from thy throne of gold, The sweetest hymn thou'st ever told, He lately learn'd and sung for me.

ODE LXXVI

Formed of the 124th and 119th fragments in Barnes, both of which are to be found in Scaliger's Poetial.

De Pauw thinks that those detached lines and couplets, which Scaliger has adduced as examples in his Poetics, are by no means authentic, but of his own fabrication,

ODE LXXVII

This is generally inserted among the remains of Alcaus. Some, however, have attributed it to Anacreon; see our poet's twenty-second ade, and the notes.

ODE LXXVIII

See Barnes, 173rd. This fragment, to which I have taken the liberty of adding a turn not to be found in the original, is cited by Lucian in his short essay on the "Gallic Hercules."

PRINTED BY MORRISON AND GIBB LIMITED EDUNBURGH